Reagan rejects Mexican appeal

From Christopher Thomas

President Reagan directly ebuffed President de la Madrid of Mexico yesterday and made it clear that the United States has no intention of scaling down its huge show of military might in Central America.

He firmly rejected the Mexican President's appeal to abandon "shouts of force" in the region. Occasionally, he in-sisted, the US must roar on behalf of democracy.

After failing to court support from the Mexicans in talks on Sunday. Mr Reagan travelled to New Orleans to face one of his most enthusiastic audiences. the veterans of foreign wars.

He told their annual convention that US military aid to El Salvador, together with US military exercises now under way in Central America, were like citizens' patrols keeping an eye on troublemakers and bullies in their neighbourhoods. He said he was intent on seeing that the Soviet Union and the Cubans could not brutally impose communist rule and deny individual freedom in the region".

Quoting Churchill's words that Britain has the lion's heart and he had the luck to give it a roar. Mr Reagan said: "America is the lion's heart of democracy. We have an obilgation to give that democracy a voice, even an our nation has been mute to the injustices of totalitarianism".

The tone of the speech is bound to broaden further the gulf between the United States and the Contadora Group -Mexico, Venezuala, Panama ind Columbia - which is intempting to bring opposing factions to the negotiating table.

Mexico, the principal partner, believes that deepening US involvement in Central America is heightening tentrol for the property for the pro and damaging prospects for regional peace talks. Although publicly praising the Contadora Group's efforts, the Regan idministration does not rate lighly its chances of success.

Mr Reagan told the war veterans, who have wholebear-tedly endorsed the Administration's strategies in Central America, that US policies were leading to quiet, solid progress despite the "discouraging hype and hoopla" of its critics.

Meanwhile the State Department said yesterday it was not both allies of the United States. The plan, according to reports from Guatemala, involves the supply of small weapons and ammunition by Salvador in return for anti-guerrilla training

Image of Soviet super-hero takes a knock

From Richard Owen, Moscow

The conventional image of the Soviet spaceman as a super-hero took a knock esterday when a cosmonaut revealed in Pravda that space flight made him irritable and depressed.

Almost an entire page of the paper was taken up with unusually frank extracts from the diary of Mr Valentin Lebedev, the flight engineer, who with Lieutenant-Colonel Anatoly Berezovoy set up an endurance record of 211 days in space on board the orbiting station Salyut 7 last year.

Cosmonauts are normally presented to the Soviet public as free from human frailities, but Mr Lebedev's diary, covering May to December, is a record of trials and tribulations punctuated by wonder at the beauty of the slowly spinning Forth below, Mr Lebedev reflects on the difficulties, the intensive training and the "debris of human relationships" which led up to the historic flight. Typical entries thereafter read: "The days are getting harder to get through": "did not sleep at all, thought about home"; "another nerve racking day, took me ages to get to sleep, Tolya (Colonel Berezovoy) didn't sleep at all".

The extracts show that Mr Lebedev and Colonel Berezovoy resented two successive visits by visiting Soyut space crews and feared they would disrupt the relationship the two men had built up on the space think they'll bring their own".

Last week Red Star published an account by Colonel Vladimir Titov of an incident in April in which a Soyuz crew under his command failed to dock with the space staion and nearly collided with it. The articles appear to be part of a Kremlin attempt to give an increasingly sophisticated readership more convincing and realistic accounts of space and military exploits.

The hazardous return of Mr Lebedev and Colonel Berezovoy to Earth lest December in a blinding snowstorm was graphically described by papers The Lebedev diary yesterday showed that Soviet techology had also failed to provide adequate washing fa-cilities. Neighbour's 'war' lasted four years

An uneasy peace descen on a tiny village last night as a farmer and his wife were given their part in a four-year war of York County Court in silence after a judge had branded their behaviour towards their neigh-bours as "vindictive, insensitive and stupid".

Judge Geoffrey Baker, QC, had heard how Mr Ron Mallinson and his wife's lives had been turned into a nightmare in a deliberate campaign of harassment almost as soon as they set up in the Humberside village of Melbourne, on the edge of the Yorkshire

The £50,000 retirement bungalow they built themselves in Kidd Lane became a virtual prison for them as the Brooks whose hundred-acre Grange Farm lay 500 yards away, bombarded them with insults, abuse, and threats.

But in sentencing the Brooks for 12 months, for breach of an order forbidding them to molest their neighbours, the judge also said Mr Mallinson, aged 49, was "hypersensitive" and "voland advised him to develop a "thicker skin". Brook, aged 47, and his wife aged 43, were each fined £250 for breaking the original injunction and ordered to pay te costs of the two-day hearing estimated at about £2,000.

After the case Mrs Mallinson, aged 46, a local govern-ment officer said: "We feel sorry for the Brooks. I don't think they realized the seriousness of the situation.

New indoor pools 'a health hazard'

Modern indoor swimming poois can be a hazard to people prone to asthma and chest complaints. So although swimming is promoted as an activity in which asthmatics can participate without experiencing exer-cise-induced wheezing, the re-verse is the case, in such pools.

The reasons modern indoor pools are not so good as older ones is explained in the latest issue of the British Medical Journal by Dr Philip Penny, an occupational health physician at Musgrave Park Hospital, Taunton, Somerset, and medical adviser to the Amateur Swimming Association. The trouble lies in the greater efficiency with which the modern pools are operated to save energy. Advanced heat reclamation systems which recirculate pool air, concentrated gaseous subtances in the atmosphere unlike old-fashioned extractor fans. There are about 200 swimming pools in the new writing in the latest issue of the society's magazine, Birds, Mr Ian Presst, its director, describes the situation as

"desperately worrying".

"By early July we knew of over 70 peregrine eyries in England, Wales and Scotland that had been robbed this year", he says. "With an average clutch of four eggs, this could represent as many as 280 could represent as many as 280 peregrins, taken either as eggs to be hatched in incubators or young birds put into aviaries to 'prove' fraudulent claims of captive breeding to the visiting inspector from the Department

Grouse season 'will improve'

The grouse shooting season has started disastrously in many parts of Britain, but there should be much better shooting in September, Savills, the estate agents, said yesterday, in their early season report. Most estates in Scotland have concelled their shoots because there are so few birds about but there are many small birds on the moors which may provide shooting later in the season.

Dry spell puts potato prices up

By our Agriculture Correspondent

The prolonged dry weather has made it virtually certain that supplies of potatoes and other home-grown vegetables will be later and less plentiful than usual in the coming months.

Prices are likely to be correspondingly higher, but at present there are no indications of a repetition of the acute shortages after the 1976

The Potato Marketing Board said yesterday that there were fairly decent crops in some areas, particularly where they had been irrigated. But the planting season had been beset by heavy rain and waterlogging and the subsequent long dry spell had added fuel to the

"If we get some rain now, we may be able to make up some leeway," an official said. Whereas at this time last year potatoes were being sold from the farm at only about £50 to £54 a tonne, prices on the futures market for delivery this November were already up to £185 a tonne.

At one period in the winter of 1976-77 prices exceeded £300 a tonne. Allowing for inflation, a corresponding price this winter would be about £500 a tonne, but he thought it was unlikely that the market would stand that sort of level. Retail prices would probably be at least 18p to 20p a pound during the winter months, compare to the average of 8p to 12p. But above that there was likely to be consumer resistance and a tendency to switch to alternatives like rice and pastas. The National Farmers' Union said yesterday that vegetables yields would be well down on last year and prices would be higher. But most crops were now irrigated, and there would be no disaster for

Sugar beet crop 'standing up well'

The British Sugar Corporation said that all reports indicated that the beet crop was standing up to the drought very well. Roots were mostly deep enough to reach water, but the entire area could certainly benefit from a good soaking. Last year's crop of 1,400,000 tonnes produced a surplus of 250,00 tonnes, of which two thirds was exported. A poor harvest this year would make life difficult for farmers and for the corporation, which is the sole buyer of all home-produced beet but, because of the overall world sugar surplus, prices would not be greatly affected.

yesterday. Captain Roger Fisher, the tribunal chairman, told Mr Ray Ninnis, aged 35, from Platts Lane, West Hampstead: This case borders on the line of being frivolous, vexatious and unreasonable"

When Captain Fisher was told there was no application for costs, he added: "Consider yourself very lucky. None of us who sit here have heard such a stupid and unreasonable application. You have cost the company a lot of time and expense.

Mr Richard Sevmour, counsel for C.A. Controls, of Hammersmith, west London, told the tribunal that Mr Ninnis had been refused permission to fly to a contract in Nigeria via Moscow so he could visit his fiancée to make marriage arrangements.

He said: "The firm was worried that Mr Ninnis would get into trouble with the hoping to get the girl out of the country. They were in the process of negotiating a contract worth £6m with the Russians and it was thought his proposed project would jeopardize it."

Mr Nimis earned £300 a week with the firm, which instals printing machines worldwide.

Mr Terrance Winter, the firm's chief executive, said: "I refused permission because he could have got into trouble and been detained. I suggested he make a tourist visit after his

The Anti-amendment Campaign had the support yesterday of two Dail deputies (MPs) a protestant clergyman, and the master of one of the city's leading maternity hospitals.

The group argues that the proposed amendment, which gives equal right to life to the mother and the foetus, could threaten medical practice, ban some contraceptions, and place restrictions on travel abroad for women of childbearing age on the ground that they might be seeking a termination. The measure was unecessary, the group said, and it failed to address itself to the 30 women a day who sought abortions in

The group criticized the Roman Catholic Church for stigmatizing members who oppose the amendment with the assertion that they were proabortion and condemned priests who used their pulpits to

The Prime Minister, Dr Garret FitzGerald, originally supported the amendment's wording but has since changed his mind. In a recent speech he said that pregnant women whose lives were now saved by medical intervention could die if it was passed. He is due to make another speech later in the campaign.

The pro-amendment group argue that, without a constitutional ban, abortion legislation could be introduced in the Irish Republic through the courts or the EEC.

Backbencher power poised for renaissance stand out in terms of parliamentary procedure as an era of trans-party alliance, consensus and reform. The period began with Mr Norman St John Stevas, Conservative MP for Chelmsford as Leader of the House, establishing 14 new select committees to monitor Whitehall departments.

It ended with Mr St John-Stevas as a backbencher seeing his private member's Bill turned into the National Audit Act, 1983, in the dying hours of the Parliament. Son who were crucial to the renaissance of backbench power were victims of the boundary commissioners or the Conservative deluge.

In terms of potential land warfare, Nato's southern flank stands in marked contrast to the central front around Germany which is, and will remain, Nato's main preoccupation.

The central front is geo-graphically compact it could be comfortably accommodated in the central Mediterranean. The southern flank, in contrast, spans a huge distance on its cast-west axis, running from west of Britain to nearly 400 miles east of Moscow.

Substantial efforts are now being made to improve the position. U.S. military and economic aid to Turkey in 1982-1983 totals $650m 1982-1983 totals $650m (£433m) and the Administration is seeking congressional approval for over $900m for 1983-1984.

After two drought years the country's staple diet has become a high-risk crop for farmers, more vulnerable than such alternatives as tobacco or cotton which have made satisfying returns.

The record harvest of 1981 has been sold or consumed and by next April maize stocks will have run out. That, as was pointed out by the CFU in

The Sculpture Show Hayward/Serpentine

Whether you regard The Sculpture Show as a triumph or a disaster may well depend on the order in which you see its sections. The superlatives which have been flying around in advance concerning its size are obviously justified: anything which can occupy the whole of the Hayward Gallery and the Serpentine Gallery, plus quite a bit of the concrete outside the former and the greensward outside the latter, has to be one of the biggest art shows staged in London in our time, and it is undoubtedly remarkable that it is devoted entirely to new sculpture, frequently by young and little-known artists. There can be nothing but admiration for the determination and flair with which the organizers have brought the 50 artists together, and thanks to the United Technologies Corporation for sponsoring the show to such an extent that admission is free.

How, then, can we look this gift horse in the mouth? Very easily - and not only because it is the duty of the critic to do just that. Of course it is my own taste I am putting on the line when I say that going round the Hayward Gallery half is a deeply dispiriting experience. But I do carnestly try to imagine the visitor who would be set ablaze with enthusiasm, and fail to come up with a convincing image. It is almost as though this part of the show has been designed deliberately to play into the hands of the person who automati-cally assumes that what is called sculpture today consists largely of random assemblages of garbage or, at best, of pieces of industrial metalroom after room the pervasive impression is of litter: litter scattered over the floor, litter piled high; litter painted and lovingly displayed or litter left to fend for

The sight is not, as Paul Temple used to say to Steve, a pretty one. And the depression induced by all this is if anything intensified by the frequent juxtaposition of finished works with project drawings, since almost invariably when this is done the drawing is far superior to the final product. What is shown up is primarily shoddy or insufficient workmanship, and even with the most advanced of art it does matter whether the artist, if he chooses not to stop at the concept merely, has the ability to realize that concept. Can anyone honestly look at the quite beautiful, magical drawings of, say, Carl Plickman or Michael Kenny, which are appreciably actuated by a sculptor's imagination, and then at the actual constructs of wood and metal they anticipate, and not feel a sharp sense of let-down?

When the works of the better-known sculptors of the middle generation are not disappointing (like Tony Cragg's Drawn-on Objects, which are precisely that and lack the wit and charm of his coloured plastic assemblages), they tend to opt for respectability and duliness, like Nigel Hall's delicately coloured wall-pieces. which look like very large high-tech towel rails. But elsewhere in the Hayward one is increasingly overcome by a sense of deliberately scraping around for something to like. There are, to be fair, things one can respond to without arrière pensée, but they are few and far between. Stephen Cox contributes a couple of pieces along the same lines as his last show at Nigel Greenwood: exquisite evocations of painted walls in classical ruins by way of what seem to be fragmentary reconstructions in pain-ted stone. And Kenneth Draper, another sculptor who also shows related drawings and paintings, manages to match them with carious painted shapes, often mounted high up the wall, which make a lively, funny and sometimes slightly sinister impression while firmly refusing precise defi-supposing that is where you choose to start - questions hang heavy on the air. Why is there no real representational sculpture, which recreates something recognizable rather than merely presenting the thing itself? Can it be that, say, Malcolm Poynter and John Davies are regarded as 100 established for inclusion? (Presumably not, or William Tucker and Richard Long, among others, would hardly be there.) Or do the organizers agree in despising altogether the sort of sculpture that the Nicholas Treadwell Gallery shows? Surely, like it or not, it is a vital part of the sculptural scene in Britain today,

As one leaves the Hayward - while a lot of what is rather faded and passé.

Arrival at the Serpentine does not answer that particular question; but certainly the cloud of gloom immediately lifts. Here in the first room we have Michael Sandle and, though it is to be hoped that he will get tired of his tomb and catafalque shapes fairly soon now, the sheer proficiency and imaginative intensity of what he is doing bring a blessed relief. And there is more unashamed representation all round. Not of the superrealist kind, on the whole, but at least sculpture which is made to establish some kind of imaginative relationship with the visible world about us. Laura Ford's animal sculptures have an unaccustomed fierceness: this dog, this pig, these sea-slugs are emphatically not cute, not in any way anthropomorphized, and the formal gestures of the sculpture are both powerful and precise. Also inside are Paul de Monchaux's exquisitely finished small Portland stone abstractions, Richard Deacon's big, shining galvanized steel constructions like If the Shoe Fits (which does look vaguely like a giant shoe) and Two Can Play (two large skeletal globes almost intersecting), and Bill Culbert's Celebration, a table set with wine glasses in which the play of light is as important as the objects lit.

And outside there are more pleasures. Perhaps the natural surroundings (if you call Kensington Gardens natural) enhance the effect of the sculpture. But I do not think it is just that A large notice says firmly "Look, Touch, but do not Climb", and it is probably necessary, not in order to discourage vandals, but to unwittingly destructive to carry over too much of the joie de vivre implicit in the sculptures into one's response to them. But otherwise, in more durable materials, might not Andy Frost's plywood Camel with the Hump be perfectly at home in an adventure playground? Possibly the appeal of Hilary Cartmell's odd tangled shapes, rearing out of the grass as though from the sea-sand, is a little more adult, but again the impulse to roll around with her Woman Under Sun or Shell Only Coming in on Waves is well-nigh irresistible (though it might be a bit like rolling around with the creature from the Black Lagoon).

In other words, if you end up at the Serpentine, you are ending up in the right place. Not only is there a certain sense of liberation coming from the South Bank's plains of cement, but, more to the point, the sculpture is in general better: more lively in its conception, more eloquent in its execution. It is not clear whether there is any sort of plan behind this disposition, apart from the need to get everything in in the most efficient way. But seen Hayward first, then Serpentine, the show not only gives a pretty fair panorama of British sculpture today, but also tells a story with a happy ending. If you want to be really depressed, try it the other way round.

The show runs until October 9. From today until October 1 there is a supplementary show at the AIR Gallery of drawings by eight of the lesser-known sculptors exhibited,

When big became beautiful

In 1967, in the midst of a crisis, I had told our bank manager that Biba would one day be like Harrods. He gave me a long, puzzled look and said, "Do you really want that?" I was adamant.

Each day as I walked from the Church Street shop to the new site in Kensington High Street, I had examined the Derry and Toms department store building close by. It was so beautiful and so unappreciated. No one there had any respect for the building or its superb detail. It had been a star in its heyday but now, as it grew old and dusty, no one even gave it a glance. I began to daydream that one day we would bring it back to its original splendour.

Later, when the High Street shop was open, I noticed a tree on the roof of Derry and Toms, and realized there was a roof garden. One lunchtime in 1969, when my son Witold came to the shop with his nanny, the sun was shining and I said. "Let's go up and see this 'garden in the sky'." We walked over to the store, got into the rickety lift that went straight up to the roof, and stepped out into another world - a most beautiful, well-kept garden. Somebody clearly adored and cared for it, although it had few flowers.

We walked around the corner and there was another garden. Witold ran on to the little wooden bridge that crossed a narrow stream and we played Billy Goat Gruff for a while and then went on to examine the tatty-looking flamingoes. We felt a million miles a away from the noisy street below. Looking over the balustrade we could see the whole skyline of London around us.

"Fitz, one day we must have this place," I said.

"Right, I'll get it for you," he replied. For the next two years I collected bits of furniture, cuttings of old carpets, mouldy old curtains with interesting weaves, and books and references about Derry and Toms. Any information that I might later need would be at my fingertips. I also collected people who would be useful for the big moment.

Anyone who was original was commissioned to do something specific for Biba. Myra Conin, for example, spent two years mixing up the basic colours for all sorts of designs. Sometimes she would spend days mixing a brown until it was the correct shade we needed for a carpet. Eventually one could describe a colour to her verbally and she would be able to put it down on paper. She spent months decorating the 1930s bust that was duplicated in glass fibre throughout the big shop. We felt shocked when we heard that our dream was going to be either shattered or forced upon us far earlier than we imagined. After all, we had only just moved to the High Street. By chance the head of the public relations agency we used knew Sir Hugh Fraser, the chairman of Derry and Toms, and heard that he was planning to sell. She organized a dinner party at her house in Windsor and invited Sir Hugh and us. It was a very high-powered party. Literally over the port and cigars Fitz managed to bring up the subject of Derry and Toms. Was Sir Hugh really selling? Sir Hugh was not sure. Would

The next step was to sell the idea to our partners. Fitz went to Bracknell, armed with reams of figures, to persuade the Dorothy Perkins board. We had agreed that come what may we were going to have that building, and if the answer was "no" from Bracknell we had flights booked the next day for New York, where we had connections who might back us. But Dorothy Perkins agreed.

'Sir Hugh tells me he has sold to you. I must have £400,000 in my hands by tonight'

The next stage was a formal lunch at Claridge's with Sir Hugh Fraser. David Roxburgh and John Ritblatt were there representing Dorothy Perkins. Ritblatt, small and sallow, was the head of a huge property company, British Land, who were property advisers to Dorothy Perkins, and took charge of the negotiations. The lunch dragged on with Rithlatt and Fraser telling stories news. Roxburgh was speechless but nothing seemed to have been accomplished.

One Friday afternoon at about 4 o'clock Fitz heard a rumour that the building was about to be sold to someone else. He rang Roxburgh, who rang Ritblatt on another line, and both said there was no more that they could do. The deal was lost. Fitz was cursing Sir Hugh Fraser. "He bloody promised

"Ring him up," I suggested.
Sir Hugh was at his desk in Glasgow.
Fitz said, "I hear you are selling the building."

"Yes," said Sir Hugh.
"You promised it to us," said Fitz.
"Have you got £3.9m?" Yes," said Fitz, who had no idea how far Dorothy Perkins might go.

"Stay by your phone," said Sir

Two minutes later a call came through to Fitz from the director in of the House of Fraser in London. It was very dramatic. "I can't talk loud," he said. "I have British Home Stores with me and I am about to sign with them. Sir Hugh tells me that he has sold to you. I must have £400,000 in my hands by tonight." Fitz went a bit white but promised it would be with him in one and a half hours. He rang Roxburgh with the passed it on to Ritblatt who, knowing a bargain when he saw one, arranged the transfer of the money within the hour.

One afternoon in the summer of 1972 Fitz came to my desk carrying a copy of the Evening Standard and looking very white. The headline on the City page carried the announcement that Dorothy Perkins had been taken over by British Land.

The shock was awful. It is every retailer's nightmare to be controlled by a property developer. The two have interests that are totally at loggerheads. The landlord must get the maximum rent while the shopkeeper must fight for every last penny. Furthermore, as we read the article, we saw that the control was passing to a board of directors composed of two accountants, a personnel manager and someone from an advertising agency. There was not one retailer among them. The situation was going to be impossible. We both knew that we should resign peak: we would have been financially very well off, and we could have walked away and let them get on with it. On the other hand, Biba was our child and to desert her now was impossible. We knew that from that day forward we would have a fight to the end on our hands.

The first day of the building work was really impressive. Before we could start we had to clear out all the rubbish and bits of odd shopfitting left behind by Derry and Toms. We had more than 600 men in the building on that first day. Half of them appeared to have worked for us as some time or other in the past. Shouts of "Hello, Barbara" followed me as I walked about between the heaps of debris. As the rubbish was cleared it was wildly exhilarating to see revealed for the first time the beautiful Art Deco details of the building.

The only thing that was not functioning was the computer that was meant to tell us exactly where we were. Every evening Fitz would spend hours working out where our budget was overrunning and what we could reduce or eliminate if we were not 10 overspend. Every day the situation changed as unexpected complications and problems emerged.

At last the moment came when I had to start laying out the merchandise. Fitz had worked out a schedule floor by floor and department by department for when the shopfitting would be complete and the merchandise in the stock rooms. I had six weeks and over 100,000 square feet of shop, and I was the only person who could do it. As I had designed or bought each thing, I had a mental picture of how they would all work together, and it was impossible to transmit the overall impression to others.

The huge display units had arrived.
They were reassembled in their final places and the finishing touches applied. As each department was finished, the manageresses and stock-room workers would assemble a cross section of all the stock around me and l would start to work.

The store had gone quiet: the workmen had left and there was an enormous silence

The first department to be ready we called the Casbah. It was on the front corner of the ground floor and comprised all the things that we had picked up and seen on our travels from Turkey via Beirut to Morocco. At about 6.30 one night the store had gone quiet; the workmen had left and there was an enormous silence. Through the brown paper-covered windows I could hear the traffic and the life outside. There was a busking bagpiper playing outside Barker's, the store across the street. According to Fitz's schedule I only had until I am to complete this part, and after I had worked for two hours lifting heavy brass objects, I seemed to have been going backwards.

My back was aching, and I felt completely lost. I had been vaguely aware of two girls sitting near me, watching what I was doing. As I wearily approached another large brass pot, one of them walked over and lifted before I could get there. 'Are you OK, Barbara?"

It was Aina, the leader of our shopassistants' union, sitting with her friend Gunda, waiting and hoping to be involved. By the time Fitz came back, all set to work through the night to help me, the job was done.

The next day I moved on to the shoe department, a huge mirrored unit right in the middle of the ground floor. We arrived as usual at 8 am and found to our amazement that the stock was already laid out waiting for us. Normally we would spend about an hour waiting for the hands to arrive to enable us to start. To find everything in place when we got there was a miracle. Far away in a corner on our newly installed escalator sat the six committee members of the union. looking rather sheepish. We went over and Fitz thanked them.

"Well," said Aina, with some contempt, "she can't do it by herself,

Not only had they helped but they had helped with thought and understanding. These girls, who had been with us for two or three years, dealing with customers under terrific pressure all day long, really did know what we were trying to do, sometimes more than we realized.

On the last day everything was as nearly ready as we were going to get it. It was a Sunday and all our staff had been working non-stop 12 hours a day for three weeks. Every sweater was in its pigeonhole, every last fireproofed plastic grape was in place on the children's floor, shoes and room sets and men's suits were all in position. The food hall could only do their display at the last minute, for obvious reasons. The security guards were in their uniforms. The waiters had had endless hours of rehearsal.

I felt almost disappointed that the preparations were over. Fitz and I took a final walk through the six floors and 400,000 square feet of our total empire. I rummaged into stock rooms and staff rooms and offices, but I could find nothing wrong. We left well before midnight. It was the first time we had been outside the Big Biba and could see it with all the lights blazing in the windows. I knew that it was not perfect, but I thought I had a lifetime to make it so.

"Recently I sent you a couple of obscure French prints. You never sent them back. Instead I received from you two dozen blank sheets of paper. Blank, that is except for the authentic signature of Pablo Picasso across the bottom. I am now having the sheets filled up with Picasso drawings by the expert whose name you kindly gave me. Thank you a million times. PS: Keep the

Yes, we at Moreover Laboratories take your boring old pictures and turn them into something bright, new and fascinating and valuable! We have world-famous experts working day and night in our studios, authenticating your pictures, ascribing them to up-and-coming old masters or simply reassigning them to masters or simply reassigning them to fashionable periods. We can arrange for them to be bought by a foreign buyer and then become the subject of a national whip-round. We can even clean them off and find a totally different and much more valuable painting underneath.

But surely, you may say, these are services provided by many more famous art and auction houses than ours. Well, yes and no. Yes, many international art dealers can take your painting and turn it into something quite different. But no, they cannot do it by return of post, as Moreover Studios can. We are the first genuine 24hour picture service in the fine art world.

Tough tobacco

It may seem curious that plant scientists are busy producing tobacco plants that are antibiotic resistant when tobacco farmers are not in the habit of spraying their fields with antibiotics, but nothing frivolous is intended. It just so happens that a bacterial gene for antibiotic resistance is a convenient starting point from which to Polymer bonus develop new systems for introduc-ing valuable genes into plants.

The most advanced system for doing so is very cunning. It makes use of bacteria that infect wounds of certain broad-leaved plants and produce turnours near the wounds. In the process some of the bacterial genes become permanently integrated into those of the plant. What biotechnologist plan to do is to replace the tumour-causing bacterial genes with genes that will benefit the plant or, to be more

For example, if a crop plant They argue that the extremely could be endowed with a gene for resistance to weed killers, the crop would suffer less when its fields are sprayed with the substance.

If any of that sounds easy, it is not. Nonetheless progress is being made steadily with model systems chosen for their ease and convenience. One such is the introduc-into cells of tobacco plants. Success is measured by the ability of the cells to grow in the presence of the Growth hormone

It is down on the farm among uncomplaining animals that biotechnology is set to make many of its earliest impacts. Recently an American company matched an earlier European launch of a vaccine against a diarrhoeal disease of vourse pies.

Generatech, one of the largest of the American companies, is more interested in growth hormone. It began by turning bacteria to the production of human growth hor-mone but has since worked its way down through cows, pigs and sheep to turkeys and chickens. The idea, in each case, is to supplement animal feed with growth hormone with the aim of producing a rapid rate in the animals with a faster turnover for the farmer.

Meanwhile the use of human growth hormone, produced by bacteria, is already the subject of advanced clinical trials. Although there is evidence of one side effect, it should not be too long before an adequate supply of bacterially produced hormone does away with the current grish extraction of it from the glands of human cadavers.

The day of the biodegradable plastic bottle came a step closer recently with the formation of the new company Marlborough company's aim is to find uses and a market for the bacterially-produced polymer that has been developed by ICI, joint owner of the company.

The double bonus of the polymer, PHB, is that it is not only produced by bacteria but can be degraded by them, avoiding petrochemicals and pollution at the same time, but perhaps producing problems for storage. In practice, there is some way to go before the polymer can be made into plastic products and before the process is cheap enough to compete with existing tech-

The renaissance of glamour and grand dressing was remarkable in the recent Paris collections. It is also an important part of young London pop style. Guest-writer Angela Neustatter looks Greenham Women. Jane Fonda, at the allure of glamour

Hard core glamour, a missing element of fashion for so long, is making a forceful reappearance this autumn. Yves St Laurent deals in slinky black dresses and a clutch-the-body button through, black leather coat dress; Anne Klein has created narrow line dresses with shoe string straps to be worn with long gloves; Calvin Klein combines the slinky with the tactile in angora body dresses, while Anthony Price, over here, has echoed his delight in glamour

But while glamour emerges periodically from designers' drawing boards as a fashion. theme, it represents more than a mode of dress. Glamour is a way of presentation, a frame of mind a game of fantasy. It sets out to transcend reality.

The kind of clothing defined as glamorous sensual, glossy, emphasizing the dynamism of the wearer, conspicuously different from anything worn for 2 mundane daily life, is based on the notion of creating something as far removed from nature as possible. Cosmetics have the same purpose for face of the quest for eternal glamour, is and hair. "They make whoever wears them feel exceptional. We all want to be exceptional, but few people have the confidence to dress for this. And the people who do not dare to experience the feeling of glamour are the ones who have a puritanical approach, who disapprove. They misunderstand glamour and believe it is about being cheap and tarty. It is about living art, and being proud of It was, of course, the Hollywood stars of the 1930s era who established the notion of glamour, who instituted the idea of contrived, consumable style. At vast expense and the efforts of numerous wardrobe creators, make-up artists, cosmetic practitioners, the stars were made to represent a "reality" which the public could copy. When Joan Crawford, described by Penny appeared in 10,000 copies of the dress she wore were sold.

It is easy to dismiss glamour as frivolous and irrelevant, yet looked at another way it is creative, artistic. To put together a lavish presentation, working on the basis of shape, colour and impact is little different to creating a picture and can be enjoyed more freely. Jeanette Kupfermann, former starlet believes glamour has a significant role in our lives. In her book The MsTaken Body (Robson Books) she talks of it as myth, as creating a "never never land" which allows women to fantasize, to escape difficult realities such as aging and death. She says it fulfils a need we have for a powerful pattern to life, explaining: "It is ironic, but to be expected, that the only women who escape the glamour myth are those who live beneath the umbrella of an overeaching religious ideology or who have entered, as in madness, into a separate reality.

Yet it is the need women have to dress up to "discuss" Stallings writing about the real body shape, the ordinari-Hollywood hype machine as ness of a natural face and to try the apotheosis of glamour", to escape the reality of aging

It is 14 months since County and District Properties, at the behest of Kensington and Chelsea council, knocked a gaping hole in Kensington Old Town Hall. Local conservation groups are worried that company and council may now have found a way of finishing the job. The DoE granted the council permission to demolish the surviving building, but only when building contractors were signed for the "firm development scheme" proposed to replace it. Now County and District have filed a fresh application scheme (their fourth) with Kensington and Chelsea, and unlike its predecessors this one looks acceptable on planning grounds. But can the royal borough be trusted to insist on the same conditions as were imposed on them by the Secretary of State? Having seen letters from the borough's chief executive to County and District urging them to wreak "the maximum possible damage" before a conservation order could be imposed, I think I can answer that.

For three million and more unemployed there is a certain irony in the fact that over the past two weeks the Department of Employment's staff training centre in Tottenham Court Road has been closed between 2 and pm for lack of a doorman. Driving straight to the heart of Wagner's heroic mystery evening on Monday of last week, in the middle of Act II of Die Walkure, Hildegarde Behrens embarked upon the long dialogue in which she brings the tidings of death to the doomed hero, with the words "Siegmund, sech auf mich" ("Siegmund, look on me"). At that moment, a puff of white smoke was seen to emerge from the Festspielhaus chimney, and the vast throng on the terrace, many of whom had been there, patiently awaiting this moment, for anything up to 30 years, fell to their knees; some were openly weeping, and a few of the more elderly ones, mostly French, expired on the spot, their faces wreathed in beatific smiles. Then the Cardinal-Secretary, Herr Wolfgang Wagner, stepped on to the balcony over the main entrance, gave the traditional blessing, Urbi et orbe, and pronounced the fateful words, so long unheard in the parts:

"Habemus Brunnhildam", All we need now is a Wotan and a Siegfried, and we shall have the fixings of an uncommonly fine Ring. I paused in Salzburg for a few days en route, to lay in some Mozart, like a man hastily putting on a thick pullover when the pilot announces that all the engines have failed and the aircraft is going to ditch in the sea. I was greeted, alas, by a sign that the world is coming to an end even more rapidly than I had supposed; a McDonald's in the Getreidegasse, almost bang opposite the front door of the Goldener Hirsch. No matter, there was also a Cosi Fan Tute, lovingly and lingeringly conducted by Muti, with Bruscantini as Alfonso and the finest Mozart tenor singing I have ever heard in my life, from Francesco. Araiza. Then I donned my sandals and my habit of coarse woollen cioth roughly tied with string, put a crust of bread and a few radishes in my scrip, took my staff in hand, and set off on my quinquennial pilgrimage to the holy place of Wagner, to sit in terrible darkness for 16 hours and there experience once more the effect of this unique music-drama, which bites its victims more deeply than any other work of art I know, and bites them, moreover, with teeth coated in a strange hallucinatory drug which induces a condition well described by the Ancient in Shaw's Back to Methuselah:

Infant! one moment of the ecstasy of life as we live it would strike

Why do we do it? Certainly not to enjoy the delights of Bayreuth, a notoriously undelightful town. (It, too, has a McDonald's, but here it is hardly out of place, for there has been a Parsifal Chemist's in the high street for at least a quarter of a century, and what I paid for a cummerbund would have kept Wagner in quilted silk dressing-gowns for at least twice as long.) All and stay out at Pegnitz with the good Herr Pilaum, whose hotel, now a member of the Relais et Chateaux confraternity, is better run and more comfortable than ever (I have an anariment so enormous that in addition to an ordinary bathroom it sports a jacuzzi pool in solid onyx that takes me 10 minutes to wade across), with Brother Hermann in the kitchen muttering spells, to good effect, over the zicklein krusprig gebraten, and a young waitress the living image of Maggie Smith.

Why do we do it? Whatever the answer, we are in good company.

Freia (Anita Soldh), on whose golden apples the gods live, is the giants' fee for building Valhalla: the Ring is her ransom fanfare to summon us back to our seats and wondering whether I have time for another brace of sausages before the interval ends, I can see, among the British contigent alone, a former Prime Minister, a Secretary to the Cabinet, a former Minister of the Arts, a former chairman of Covent Garden, a royal duke, a Warden of Wadham, a genius, a saviour of Venice, a young composer on his honeymoon, a directorgeneral, and a man who claims to have acquired a ticket for Götterdammerung this very morning by mingling with the seething crowd outside the box office (sold out since last November) in search of what he called "the most obviously criminal face I could spot" and, when he spotted it, asking it out of the corner of his mouth whether it had one of sell at double the official price, being instantly rewarded for both his ingenuity and his perspicacity by discovering that he had hit, first go, upon the leading ticket-tout of the Bayreuth Festival, if not of all Bavaria.

But why do we do it? This year, at any rate, there is an extra answer. When Georg Solti and Peter Hall (they are known as "die Sirs" in the town) were engaged for the new Bayreuth Ring, they promised that they, together with Hall's chosen designer, William Dudley, would give Wagner everything he asks for

From where I stand, waiting for the in the stage directions - settings, supernumaries and all. ("Even a bear?" I asked Sir Peter incredulously when I heard of this rash promise. "Even a bear", he replied with hardly a tremor in his voice. And there it is, in Act I of Siegfried, large, brown and furry, and plainly longing to growl.) Now a naturalistic Ring has been long overdue; I have not seen the door of Hunding's parlour fly open to admit the moonlight since the late 1940s, and I doubt if Fricka's chariot has been drawn by rams since Wagner died. Well, in this Ring the door flies open and the moonlight floods the stage as it floods the orchestra, and when Fricka arrives in the next Act she arrives, as Wagner specifies, in a chariot drawn by rams, and very handsome black rams they are, too.

That is by no means all. The staged, their trees like the real trees I see on my way in to Bayreuth on board Herr Pflaum's festival bus, and the sunlight, falling through their branches, perfectly convincing, as are most of the interiors - Mime's smithy, for instance, and Nibelheim, where Alberich has built himself a golden throne. There is a real rope for the Norus, too, real water for the Rhinemaidens (stark naked, incidentally, though one of them needs to take her bottom to the sunshine on some secluded beach, for at present it is disconcertingly paler than the rest of her) and a truly savage dragon, looking like a cross between a Siberian mammoth and a science-fiction giant lobster. I swear that there are even real flames on the stage for the Immolation, in which case some of the Gibichungs milling around the pyre had better be firemen in disguise.

Nor is it just a matter of authentic props and scene-painting; the move-ment, especially for the Rhinemaidens and the Vassals, is as good as anything I have ever seen on an operatic stage, and the great set-pieces - notably the Entry into Valhalla and the Funeral March are replete with imagination and integrity, as indeed are many of the details, such as the dinosaur into which Alberich turns himself in the first transformation instead of the usual snake or dragon (inevitably upstaged later by the real dragon) and the murder of Fasolt by his brother, accomplished not with a club but with a chunk of the fata gold. The acting, it is true, is mostly no more than a sketch so far, and in some cases hardly even that, but the obvious intentions behind the sketch offer hope for a finished picture next year or the year after.

There are mistakes, of course, worst of them being Hall's decision to use a gauze, which fuzzes everything, particularly that which should not be fuzzed. Then again, the Valkyries' collection of the bodies from the battlefield is a mess. and the Gibichung Hall, until the final scene, is horribly cramped, besides being carpeted, apparently, in bird-droppings.

Yet a Ring cannot be made out of anthenticity alone. Peter Hall's success lies in the way he has enabled us, by his fidelity to the wishes of a composer with a well-deserved reputation for knowing his own mind, to see both the drama and its meanings plain. Away with the "interpretations" we have had these last years, mostly by salon-Marxists who have never read more than two paragraphs of Marx and understood neither of those. Away with the incessant hunger to epater les bourgeois, to draw parallels that are not parallel and conclusions that conclude nothing. Away with everything that blocks our path into the heart of Wagner's mystery with signposts that claim to be directing Wagner's great tale of will and power, of love, renunciation and redemption, of sacrifice and self-sacrifice, will speak clearly enough to an audience when the director has the courage - as Hall has had - to let it do so, to seek the truth in the relationships, in the characters and their natures, in the symbolism, in the struggle of strength that cannot be waged through force ("Nichts durch Gewalt¹⁷), in the Shake-spearian understanding of the human heart that runs right through this most heroic of dramas. (No director who does not comprehend Shakespeare can succeed in the Ring, and Hall is one of our finest Shakespearian directors). The clue shatespearant directors). The cane lies in the pattern of the leitmotifs; these will always guide us to the meanings great and small, and it is a measure of Hall's success that I caunot remember having seen or heard a Ring in which they made Wagner's points, with all their complexity and many-sidedness, in a manner at once so urgent, so clear and so illuminating.

Edward Schumacher on Chile's growing impatience with military rule

After the riots, Pinochet firing line

As September 11 and the tenth anniversary of Chile's military coup approaches, the junta appears to be bowing to popular pressure for a faster move towards democracy than so far promised. Twenty-four people died in riots during the latest monthly protests, but they prompted a government reshuffle.

Among moves by President inochet was the appointment of Sergio Onofie Jarpa to the key Interior Ministry. Jarpa was not long in office before he was saying that the government would call a plehiscite on amending the constitution to speed up the congre elections now scheduled for 1990. He did not say when the plebiscite or the elections might be held. But the statement, published last weekend, marked the first time a senior official has said that the government was open to amending the consti-tution, which was adopted in a plebiscite three years ago. The constitution specifies that General Augusto Pinochet hold office until at least 1989 and that a congress be elected in 1990. Pinochet has repeatedly said he would not change the constitution or the timetable for elections.

In El Mercurio, Chile's conservafive and influential daily, Jarpa said: "I cannot say when, but we are going to have an elected congress before 1990." The Interior Minister said he had no doubt that an earlier election date would be approved in the plebiscite.

The latest demonstrations appeared to have died out by Saturday

The protests have been called monthly for the past four months by PHS opposition parties and unions. The Democratic Alliance, a coalition of five centrist parties headed by the Christian Democrats, has said it will call a protest again next month, when Pinochet will celebrate the anniversary of his coup against Salvador Allende.

There was no immediate response from opposition leaders to Jarpa's remarks. It seemed unlikely, however, that they would be appeased. The Alliance a week ago demanded Pinochet's immediate resignation, formation of a provisional government and convening of a constituent assembly to draw a new constitution for submission at elections in 18

The Alliance claims that the 1980 constitution, though approved by nearly two-thirds of the voters, was unfairly presented. The government restricted opposition campaigning and no alternative was presented The country was then in the midst of an economic boom. Now, it has been in recession for two years. Public opinion has turned strongly against Pinochet.

The Interior Minister's promises went beyond a political plan announced a week ago by Pinochet, who said the Council of State, a consultative body, would study only proposed laws such as reactivating banned political parties. Jarpa implied in the interview that he was speaking with the support of the General when he said that Pinochet had charged him to carry out the political initiative. Jarpa was appointed Interior Minister last Wednesday. A former conservative senator and founder of the right-wing National Party, he was ambassador to Argentina for aimost eight years before taking the

Before taking the post, Jarpa demanded that Pinochet begin making transition steps to democracy, including early congressional elections, sources close to him said. The sources said they did not know what conditions, if any, were finally agreed to. But, they said, Jarpa supports Pinochet's remaining as president until 1989.

Jama's strategy, the sources say, is not to satisfy the opposition but to broaden the government's political base by attracting back conservatives who have abandoned Pinochet because of his refusal to begin, at the least, transitional steps to democracy. El Mercurio is among those calling for such steps.

Jarpa said opposition leaders would be invited to participate in the Council of State deliberations on the new political laws, but declined to specify how. Gabriel Valdes, leader of the Christian Democrats, said in an interview on Friday that Alliance leaders would not even talk to the government unless their parties were recognized and the talks were public. He said Jarpa closed the doors to talks when he suggested last week that many of the Alliance leaders were political exhibitionists. Moreover, Valdes said, the protest movement has grown so large that the government's political openings were too late to be effective.

Foxtrotsky and a Minuet Tendency

Holidays, like birthdays, weddings country dancing did little to arrest and temporary farewells, are points the decline, and when finally the of transition and renewal. Hence they are occasions for dancing. Every summer people gather in of the ugly and the aged, if was Mediterranean resorts and, to the family established that dancing is an Timorous at first, they steadily gain inspiration, and step out with unpractised movements and a kind of stumbling courtesy. By a miracle of me-established harmony they begin to move to a common pulse, and gradually their faces suffuse with smiles.

So it is, at least, in the south, where the habit of social dancing dancing which needs no histful motive, which extends equally to the very old and the very young, which permits man to dance with man, woman with woman and child with child - has not yet disappeared.

In the north, however, dancing has virtually ceased to exist as a social occasion. What passes for dancing is in fact a lonely parody of the sexual act. a formless vibrating of the body, accompanied by vacant expressions and wild movements of the hands and arms. The partici-pants do not touch but stand isolated in the solitude of their feelings, jerked by the music like puppets on a string. The dance relies for its excitement upon a constant heightening of the tension in this string, as lights flash and noises throb in a ghastly parody, also, of battle.

The distance between a bop and a minuet reflects the immense dis-tance between cultures. In the first each dancer is free to stimulate himself in his preferred way, without reference to his nominal partner. Such a dance lends itself perfectly to the temper of a society that fears accomplishments, and which believes that each person has an equal right to consideration, regardless of his social competence or personal

The minuet, by contrast, is exclusive and disciplined. It is also social: each dancer must obey the formation, and from time to time change partners so as to dance with someone whom he did not choose. He must confine his seductive gestures to those little nuances which are all the more pleasurable for their resemblance to the innocent smiles and touches of the dance. The excitement lies in the coordinated movement in which a shared skill provides the foundation for a common pleasure. Hence the minuet is a truly liberating dance, containing a vast store of social opportunity, freed from the imperatives of sexual desire.

To bop with someone to whom you are not attracted is a desultory experience, since the meaning of the act has been removed. It is scarcely surprising that the practice of asking different partners to dance has disappeared, and dancing itself eligible. The revival of Scottish national politics.

Viennese waitzes and polkas had dashed the legitimate expectations sound of violin, guitar bouzouki or affair for the young couple alone electric organ, begin to shuffle off The history of modern dancing in their coils.

Timorous at first, they steadily society of isolated couples cannot resist the fear of competence, which necessitates the discovery of dancer which have no recognizable steps and the fear of social affection, which requires that bodies set in motion by music should not be touched but merely displayed.

Perhaps, you may say. But why go on filling space that might have been devoted to the burning questions of politics? The answer is simple: if you do not understand dancing, then you will never understand politics. Dancing is the paradigm of political fulfilment. People who step together in a dance are at one with mselves and their fellows. Their action is also response, and they move in a collective movement, with no purpose beyond the present pleasure. The uselessness of dancing is precisely why we value it. The person who joins the dance extinguishes purpose, and is content. for the moment, to be. The meaning of the dance is the dance itself.

Dancing therefore reminds us of the fundamental truth of our condition. The purpose of life is life itself. This is the truth that Keats perceived in the figures of the Grecian um, and which he summarized in such paradoxical words.

It was also perceived by those who devised the old social dances. They saw that the revelation of the sublime purposelessoess of human existence must be carefully prepared, that it must be given a full and generous social context, freed from the tyrainry of sexual excitement, and decked out in the costumes of peace. The dance then becomes a symbol of all that matters in our political condition.

True politics maintains a social order in its own self-made equilibrium; it eschews those "final solutions" and "irreversible shifts" with which fascists and socialists threaten all that is merely actual; it renounces the desire to establish the kingdom of heaven, and interferes in the rhythm of ordinary life only so as to teach the steps of the dance.

These steps must be complex and varied, so as to break down the aggressive isolation of the sexual bond, and to generate a public life that is something more than a congeries of private intimacies. The highest forms of politics exhibit the order and beauty of the minuer, the lowest forms resemble the disorderly solipsism of the jive. But even in its lowest form politics is to be preferred to that other thing which is not politics but war - the reckless pursuit of purpose, by those in the thought, I shall turn next week

Hunting down the elusive facts

The anti-hunters have started their season early this year, with a new note in the baying of the unattractive little pack run by the League

Against Cruel Sports.

The league's latest shrill propaganda line is that organized hunting in Britain cannot be trusted to stick to its own rules. As first reported in The Times, the league has revealed that it employs a leading hunt saboteur as a double agent to spy on

"Infiltrating" a hunt is about as difficult as infiltrating a soccer Cup Final crowd. Hunting is open to inspection by and bona fide representative of press or broadcasting. The most important messages hunting would like to convey to the general public are:

• The sport has its own strict rules. The ruling bodies are prepared to investigaté serious allegations of rule-breaking.

Disciplinary action and sance tions can be taken against a master of hounds proved to have broken the rules.

Organized hunting is demonstrably the most humane and effective method of necessary control of red deer on Exmoor, foxes in rural areas, hares and wild mink. Hunting's conservationist role in preserving habitats such as fox coverts, its encouragement of hedge-rows and its beneficial effect on social life in the country are not easily understood by many in the urban majority.

At a time when the technical means of communication have become so sophisticated there is a chasm of misunderstanding between the man who takes his under-exer-cised, over-fed dog to defecate in the park, and the man who regularly takes his fit, working dog to hunt a wild animal in its own environment. ·To seek deliberately to widen the gap of understanding between the huge urban majority and the genuine rural minority can do nothing but harm. This is one of the most mischievous by-products of the line of attack so frequently adopted by the full-time propagadists who have now taken over the anti-hunting lobby.

Their use of the emotional loud pedal has been all too successful in producing legacy income to pay for their advertising campaigns - and to employ a hunt saboteur. How much better for wild life if the money from those who want to help animals were spent on such priorities as boosting the campaign to discourage the illegal importation of animals which can so easily spread rabies.

Fleet Street to hawk "spy" pictures for the highest possible price, and promising more "shock horror revelations". Anyone with evidence that a hunt has broken the rules can present it to the sport's ruling bodies or seek legal redress. It is, for example, a criminal act to restrain a wild animal in a bag, then release it for hounds to hunt.

Under the long-established system of organized hunting, Britain has the largest fox population in Europe; the red deer herds on Exmoor flourish under selective culling by the hunts, with close seasons observed; and hares and mink abound in the

The alternative would be anarchy. control would be impossible for anyone to monitor - certainly not by "undercover agents". Poaching of red deer on Exmoor is greatly discouraged by the existence of organized hunts, but when poaching does occur it produces deer horrendously wounded by shotguns, leading to slow, painful death.

There is more than a hint of desperation in the present anti-hunt-ing propaganda tactics because of the strong position of organized hunting. More people are hunting, and applying to take it up, than ever. More than 200,000 people hunt regularly in Britain, and throughout a year, about a million follow hounds. The recent Cobham Resource Consultants survey of field sports showed an annual direct investment of £102m in hunting. Many Britons clearly enjoy watching a well-bred pack of hounds tackling the difficult task of hunting a wild animal. Huntsmen's abilities are discussed in rural circles with & the enthusiasm accorded in cities to soccer players.

Disapproval of hunting by some is inevitable, and individual conscience about the taking of life must be respected. Militant, emotional propaganda seeking to destroy organized hunting without produc-ing other realistic forms of control and wild life conservation is another matter in a Britain which kills millions of animals each week and shows no national interest in adopting the extreme moral position of the vegetarian who will not wear animal skins its house in good order. No one will ever love the land and its wild life more than he who has had the privilege of experiencing the hunting field throughout the season. The author is editor of Horse and projections in defence spending inherited from Labour - Mr Pym protesting. Mr John Nott then came in to apply these cuts in a way which aggravated their effect on service planning - and in particular on the Navy - by withholding a large part of the projected spending plan as a central reserve from which he hoped to meet particular diffi-

That operation was paid for out of the Government's contingency reserve. The bill for replacements, which Mr Nott managed skilfully to win through in Cabinet, overrode Treasury misgivings. The Treasury also had to concede some year-toyear control on defence spending when it agreed, under the urgings of Sir Frank Cooper the last Permanent Secretary, that any Defence Ministry underspend could be rolled forward up to a maximum annual figure of £300 million.

It seemed that when Mr Heseltine took over in January the Defence Ministry could hope for a more settled future. That that is not to be the case became clear enough from the arbitrary and undebated manner in which the new Chancellor announced a

The question at issue is a commitment in Nato to increase the defence budget by 3 per cent per annum. That explicit obligation expires in 1985-86, but Nato ministers have resolved to try to extend it beyond. The reasury argument is that Britain has more honourably discharged this commitment than many of her allies, and that anyway she pays more per head

It is not easy to cut the defence budget in a hurry. The first item which will inevitably be put in the lists is the Trident nuclear missile system. However, that is so fundamental to the Government's whole notion of deterrence that it seems an unlikely source of economy. It would be unwise to start fiddling about with Trident. The Trident system is one of the few strategic elements in a defence structure which is very vulnerable to the sudden whim of accountancy, as the Navy learnt to its cost under Mr Nott. It is a 40-year system. The original estimates of its cost have already been reduced now that it has been put in the Navy vote and its costs are responding to the benefits of long-term planning. Indeed the nuclear submarine is one of the few major items of equipment which today costs less in real terms than it used to, solely on account of long production runs and a stable commitment to building up the fleet. With Trident in the budget, it is argued that there are only two radical measures with, for in- serious options left, both of them unacceptable. The first would be tion of unemployment pay and to continue to slice away at the existing defence structure, cuting of public welfare. It is right ting back on equipment, delaythat defence should take its place ing production runs, drawing in the public spending queue; it down ammunition stocks. The is wrong that it should be done at effect of that would be to be to embrace a Gaullist-style defensive position, withdrawing our troops from the Continental while allowing the distortions line up, and preserving only a notional commitment to deploy them automatically on behalf of the Alliance. The full consequences of such a withdrawal would be incalculable within Nato, but would almost certainly lead to its ultimate collapse.

In fact there is a third way, but not in the time available to Mr Heseltine, if Mr Lawson's demands have to be met with decisions by November. The Chiefs of Staff have already carried out a review of Britain's likely military role out of the Nato area. The conclusions of a further review into the whole range of our commitments to the Nato alliance, and possible changes in Alliance strategy which would permit alterations in the size and nature of our contributions, will not be ready until the spring. It is already clear in outline that financial pressures could be a useful catalyst for a much more radical approach to Nato strategy than any governments have hitherto permitted themselves. The Alliance line-up in Central Europe makes military nonsense. It is a tangled web of old political formulae summed up only too shrewdly by the witticism that Nato is intended to keep Americans in, Russians out and Germans down.

The principles on which Britain could base a policy of fundamental reform in Nato's strategy and defence administration will be explored in more detail tomorrow. As with its task in every field of domestic spending this Government now has an opportunity to apply radical thinking to rigidities which have inhibited policy making for a generation. It may be more difficult to effect change in the diplomatic and military field than in social policy. But if this Government fails to take up the opportunity, no future British Government, and certainly no fellow member of

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From the President of the Royal the medical profession would not be

College of Physicians Sir. May I be permitted to make a few points in reply to your leader of August 10?

Of course, doctors make decisions about "access to health care". In our daily routine we regularly have to decide who to treat and how to treat: this is an integral part of our work. We are equipped to make these decisions through a long period of medical training and experience and we take into account such factors as the state of knowledge and understanding of a disease and its progress without treatment, our assessment of the patient's physical and mental condition, our awareness of the likely success of treatment, and of side-effects. Training in the management of health resources" would not equip us better to deal with these problems, but might introduce an economic factor that would further restrict the options open to us. Bearing in mind the important medical factors applying to each patient, could anyone other than a doctor make this choice?

Many doctors deplore the "expopential curve in the consumption of prescribed drugs". Partly this results from the public's expectation of treatment even for trivial complaints such as a cold; many patients regard themselves as inadequately treated unless they are given pills or medicines. Doctors should not take all the blame for society's obsession with pill-taking to cope with the ordinary stresses of life.

No-one who has studied the matter dispassionately would deny the tremendous contribution drug therapy has made (antibiotics, hormones, the control of Parkinsonism, etc). We are now left with a residue of diseases that remain hard to treat, but a policy of therapeutic nihilism would inhibit the exploratory use of drugs that has led recently to life-saving advances in the management of leukaemia and allied conditions and some forms of Basic to all new treatment is the profession's acceptance of clinical trials. These are devised to test very strictly the ability of a new drug beneficially to influence the outcome of disease. The most common conclusion of such clinical trials is not that a new treatment should be adopted, but that it should be rejected. Many drugs "have to be taken off the market" because they have been found wanting. The profession, indeed the public, has the right to expect the same approach to alternative forms of increased teaching of the human Good doctors - and I believe the overwhelming majority of doctors to be good - treat their patients as human beings and are aware of the importance of personal and emotional factors. Any denial of this would suggest that doctors are less than human in their reaction to personal suffering. Finally, it is not difficult to understand why patients with cancer seek alternative forms of treatment. The inevitability of a fatal illness is hard to accept. Doctors in general handle dying patients with great sympathy and understanding. To ease the pain of this difficult terminal period, the profession has welcomed the establishment of hospices for the dying.

There is the world of difference between the provision of institutions that provide this sort of help and unsubstantiated claims that alternative forms of treatment can cure

I, for one, would welcome the unequivocal demonstration that a malignant tumour has been cured by any form of alternative medicin Until this proof is available, such claims will not be taken seriously by the profession and should be disregarded by the public.

I apologise for writing at such length. The policies you advocate could lead to major and, I believe, damaging changes in the provision of health-care and warrant an even fuller rebuttal than this letter can hope to achieve. Yours faithfully, RAYMOND HOFFENBERG,

From Dr Malcolm Carruthers Sir. As founder member of the British Holistic Medical Association I must congratulate your paper on the signal service it has done this vital bridging operation between orthodox and alternative medicine. One area not apparently covered however is the practical politics of putting these splendid ideas into practice. Financial resources for this are unlikely to be available from the over-stretched and generally unre-ceptive NHS, and even when applied by highly trained orthodox doctors, such treatment is seldom medical enterprise has not been free to respond to patient demand and has been fettered by government finance. Little wonder then that alternative medicine has flourished. The job security given to NHS doctors has lessened the bond between the patient and the practitioner and has also resulted in little objection when patients seek therapy from alternative sources. This is why general practitioners and osteopaths and chiropractors appear to work more closely. Since alternative medicine flourishes in the market place none medicine can deny it has a value. However, if general medicine were to be freed of its state constraints it would eventually overrun its competitors entirely on pure grounds of merit. Yours faithfully,

From Dr P. M. J. Future of Alliance

From Mr Alan Watson

From the Master of St Catherine's advantage, however, in an initiative from outside government if fresh and radical policy ideas are to be Sir. As the Liberal-Alliance candidate in what is now the most marginal seat in the South of England I have no doubt that future Ailiance success depends on our ability to persuade voters that we are fit for government and as relevant to Britain's needs today as Labour was in 1945. We will not replace Labour as the alternative to the present Institute that it is open to them to Government if we passively wait upon the continuing collapse of that party. Labour's failure will not guarantee our success and their increasing lack of credibility does not ensure our own.

The Alliance has to show that it is ready for power. To do this we must evidence coherence of policy, cohesion of organisation and the commitment of our united energies and resources. I cannot see how this will be achieved unless there is an effective coming together of the two parties; an organic merger willed from the grassroots and welcomed by the leadership, starting with the joint selection of candidates. Such a merger need not diminish the particular appeal of either the Liberal Party or the SDP but can enhance the effectiveness of both.

It would be folly to preserve our differences in aspic in the belief that these will constitute our appeal under proportional representation. Electoral reform will only occur when the Alliance wins power. We will win power only when we show ourselves capable of government. This must involve offering electors throughout Britain a single, clear-cut alternative to voting Labour or

British Gas profits From Mr A. J. Lucking

Sir, Mr Jewers (August 5) com-mends the nationalised industries' current primitive system of "cocoa tin financing", under which today's users have to pay for the capital equipment needed tomorrow. A further consequence is that organizations such as British Gas and British Airports have to pass on unnecess-arily large tax bills, notably as the upvaluation of assets under the current cost system has raised depreciation charges dramatically

Even more disastrous than the impact on all of us as domestic consumers is the effect on industrial costs. Often our competitors in the US can obtain fuels and fuel-rich raw materials at lower prices and there is a strong case for transferring production there. The sooner these key nationalised suppliers gain access to outside funds the better for Britain, though, as the reforms on British Airways have demonstrated, exposure to price competition is an essential spur, too. Yours faithfully. A. J. LUCKING. Flat 20, Broad Court, Bow Street, WC2.

Dumping of waste in N Atlantic

From Mr David McTaggart Sir, Dr Roberts of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive (August 10) cannot continue to praise and defend a position adopted by this Government on radioactive waste dumping when other countries have abandoned the practice, when the London Dumping Convention itself requests contracting parties to view this method of disposal as the least desirable and when 19 nations, representing millions of people throughout the world, voted in favour of a suspension of the practice at the February meeting of that body.

The lone voice of the UK

pleading its innocence and injury is beginning to wear thin and to grate on the patience of other nations. Perhaps Dr Roberts needs remind-ing that the five Nordic nations have made it clear that the UK's position is not respected and that all that is asked of this country is that it abides by a democratically arrived-at decision.

The "careful international assessment" Dr Roberts refers to is full of assumptions and projections rather than hard facts and admits gaping holes in even the most contemporary of scientific information. It attacks the model upon which dumping has been based for

In the light of this and other information, not the least of which was the overwhelming vote in favour of a two-year suspension of dumping called for by the LDC, the National Union of Seamen, together with the TGWU and Aslef, have demonstrated more sensitivity to international public opinion than this Government has any intention of doing and they must be praised for adopting a stance which has had financial disbenefits for some of their members. Yours faithfully.

DAVID McTAGGART, Chairman. Greenpeace International, Lewes, Sussex.

From the Director-General of the General Council of British Shipping Sir, Dr Roberts (August 10) has explained authoritatively that there is no danger to sea or human life in dumping low-level radioactive waste in the Atlantic deeps in the manner employed by the Atomic Energy Authority.

All that the action of the National Union of Seamen, the Transport and General Workers' Union and the Association of Steam Loco-motive Engineers and Firemen is achieving in "blacking" the specially converted ship concerned is loss of jobs and business for British seamen - both officers, who are still on board, and ratings - and dockers and railwaymen.

And this at a time when there; is seafarers and a fifth of our merchant fleet laid up. The vessel may now have to be sold abroad where it will be manned by officers and ratings of another country who will proceed to pick up the contracts for the disposal of this type of low-level waste from other ports.

The unions are unwilling even to discuss the matter with the Authority and the shipowners. Could they not reconsider that refusal in the light of Dr Roberts's letter?

Yours faithfully, W. P. SHOVELTON,

Director-General, General Council of British Shipping, 30-32 St Mary Axe, EC3.

Charity statistics From Mr E. W. I. Palamountain

Sir, Mr Brophy's letter (August 5) suggests at least one point of general interest and substance.

The reason why the total of charitable donations by companies has risen from the low level of the previous year are likely to remain obscure, although the redoubled efforts of charities which have lost public support is probably one of them. However that may be, it would be not merely unrealistic but wrong for charitable bodies to expect much higher levels of support from corporate donors.

The overriding obligation of any board of directors is to look after the interests of its shareholders, who have every right to require that any significant proportion of revenue allocated to charitible causes should be justified by reference to its anticipated effect on profitibilty. Many donations would satisfy this criterion, but no by means all.

The problem of the "non - qualifying" or marginal donations is considerably eased if the company (with the full approval of its shareholders) establishes a charitible trust - funded, let us say, out of the (gross) profits made in good years. Such action has, of course, been taken by a number of well-known companies and one may hope that in a period of recovery their example might be followed by many others. Yours faithfully. EDGAR PALAMOUNTAIN, Chairman. Wider Share Ownership Council, Juxon House, 94 St Paul's Churchyard, EC4.

Sea change

From Mr Andrew Robertson

Sir, Mr Kilpatrick (August 6) regrets the replacement of sailors by crewmen, but of all the changes in terminology surely the most regrettable, not to say sinister, are those in sports reporting.

Teams have become squads (squad spirit?); strokes are now shots; centre forwards are strikers; and, worst of all, tie breaks are now sudden death play-offs. And we wonder at football hooliganism! Yours faithfully, ANDREW ROBERTSON, 11 Abercom Close, St John's Wood, NW8. August 6.

But as far as is known his little army was composed entirely of citizens of expect help. Chad. The war was still essentially a civil war, and Mr Habre won a convincing victory. That makes him as legitimate a president as Chad has had in recent years, or is likely to have in the next few. Mr Goukouni, despite all the advantages which may be supposed to accrue to an incumbent ruler, lost. Mr Goukouni is presumably entitled, under the rules of this game which looks so futile to the spectator but is apparently enjoyed by the players, to attempt to turn the tables on Mr Habre using the same methods. What is more questionable is whether Colonel Gaddafi is entitled to help him do so by sending Libyan aircraft to carry

In so doing Colonel Gaddafi has changed the nature of the game - as President Mitterrand has implicitly recognized by sending French troops back to Chad, even if nominally as "instructors", for the first time since 1980. M Mitterrand's Government has a healthy distaste for intervention in the internal affairs of African countries. But this is no longer a mere internal affair. Chad has been invaded by Libya, and - according to the rules of the international community, codified in the UN Charter - is entitled to

So Chad does exist after all or if it does not, Colonel Gaddafi has somehow overlooked the fact. Why he should choose to invest such large military resources in an enterprise that has defeated so many others - and which, indeed, cost Libya itself dear only two years ago - is somewhat baffling. Presumably he hoped that the weakness and indecision of his opponents, in Africa and beyond, would allow him an easy victory which would tip the evenly balanced scale of African geopolitics in favour of his confused revolutionary designs. It would be better if Africans could prove him wrong on their own. But it is right that their European friends should be out intensive bombing of targets ready to help.

From Major-General D. G. Moore Sir, As a former Chairman of the North-west Angling Federation of Ireland for more than a dozen years, I would be glad to give the fullest support to Sir George Kennard's plea (August 2) for action to reduce the scale of netting of Atlantic salmon. I would only differ from Sir George on a question of emphasis, for I believe that grilse, which constitute the majority of migratory fish and provide most of the sport in many of our rivers, are even more vulnerable to the menace of over-netting than are so called "full" salmon. It is worth noting that the Foyle waters, which have been in their day the most prolific Atlantic salmon system in the world, classified 98 per cent grilse to 2 per cent full salmon at the peak of their recorded catches when they were over 150,000 fish

While the feeding grounds of the one-sea-winter fish, which are technically grouped under the term grilse, are still uncertain, the main grilse run from the Atlantic is well known. Since it approaches the Irish coast on a narrow span in both time and space, it is highly vulnerable.

It is probable that this same run feeds all the grilse rivers of Britain; therefore the ever-increasing attack upon the run at sea must affect them all. Forty miles of illegal monofilament nylon net have been seized by the fishery protection service of the Irish Republic in the present year alone.

It is however important to realise that the Irish drift-net fisheries do not exploit either spring salmon runs or those of autumn grilse because it is not economically profitable to do so, due to the relative paucity of fish in the open sea at those times. The short season from June to mid-August is devastatingly rewarding.

Finally, let us realistically accept that it is politically impossible at the present time to eliminate legal drift and enclosed water netting. We should therefore press for statutory regulation of netting so that escapement will ensure that every river system receives the required stock for both sport and breeding purposes according to ratios agreed by the respective river authorities. Yours faithfully. DENIS MOORE, Pooks Hill, Four Marks, take such an initiative.

Colourless cricket

From Mr J. L. I. Palmer Sir, Is that time-honoured feature the cricket cap an endangered species and likely to become extinct? When amateurs played in the first-class game there was a tremendous variety in this form of headwear, consisting of university "blues" and the associated clubs, Harlequins and Authentics from Oxford wth Quidnuncs and Crusaders from Cambridge.

Then there were caps of famous national clubs such as I Zingari, Free Foresters and Incogniti mingling with those of the county amateur clubs. Players wearing the colours of Sussex Martlets, Hampshire Hogs and Somerset Stragglers, to name but three, often appeared in their county championship teams. All this gave cricket grounds an atmosphere of colour and gaiety which is sadly lacking to-day.
It could, of course, be argued that official county caps such as the green ones of Leicestershire and Worcestershire, the maroon of Northamptonshire and the chocolate shade of Surrey do offer a little variety, but even these seem to be disappearing. Perhaps, then, the day is not far off when we shall read in the sporting columns of our newspapers such announcements as: "After his recent successes for his county, Smith has won his first England helmet", or. "Although Jones has been on the staff for two seasons, he

Call to 'protect'

The former head of religious broadcasting on BBC Radio, the Very Rev Colin Semper, has described as an appallingly retrograde step the Independent Broad-people who took their religion scriously".

It was time, be said, that religious programmes were given proper protection. The controllers of Mr Donald Sinden preparing to begin the restoration of St Mary-le-Strand yesterday (Photograph: Chris Harris).

Saving a London landmark

Mr Donald Sinden, the actor, yesterday donned a topping-out hat and climbed 60 feet up a ladder to start an operation which, it is hoped, will save the steeple of one of London's most beautiful churches. St Mary-le-Strand, near the Aldwych, which was designed by James Gibbs, architect of the Radcliffe Camera in Oxford, has been a focal point for royalty, and their subjects, as they make their way from the West End to the City since 1717.

But bomb damage in the Second World War and traffic pollution have taken their toil. The iron cramps holding up the steeple have rusted and the stone itself has cracked. The steeple is now in such poor condition that have decided to preempt a dangerous structure notice by pulling it down. It is hoped, however, that the steeple will look down on the Strand again one day after restoration.

Mr Sinden, who marked with a chisel the first piece to be removed, said it was vital that enough money was found to ensure the steeple could be rebuilt in its original form.

"This church has for centuries been the triumphal way between the west and the City of London, and people have just got to cough up

The sketches of Generals Alexander, Anderson and Montgomery by Captain Sam Morse-Browne.

Wartime portraits found in archives

A tip-off in a Sussex public house led to the discovery in the archives of the Imperial War Museum of these drawings of wartime British commanders which will appear in a book of poetry, prose and art to be published next month on the fortieth anniversary of the Allied landings in Italy. The artist, Captain Sam Morse-Browne, drew the commanders, Generals Montgomery, Alexander and Kenneth Anderson, at their headquarters, exercising his talent not as an official war artist but as a hobby. Each drawing is signed by the sitter. The book has been compiled under the title From Oasis into Italy by the Salamander Oasis Trust following up their first volume, Return to Oasis. Mr Victor Selwyn, the trust's manager and editor, said: "I happened to be in the pub at Rottingdean when someone asked if I knew about these portraits. The artist's family comes from Lewes and he himself now lives in Bermuda."

Panel clears UBM scheme

The Takeover Panel, the body which looks after share-holders' interests, has decided that the share option granted by UBM to four directors does not infringe the takeover rules. The options were granted to the UBM directors just a few days before Norcross announced it was making a £70m bid for the builders merchanting group which caused the share price to rise to 120p. The options were granted at 81p. The panel is satisfied that the directors acted in good faith when they asked shareholders to give them powers to take options at the annual meeting and they could not have known a bid was coming. • Davy McKee, the Sheffieldbased heavy engineering firm, has won a £70m contract which will give a new lease of life to a hot-strip mill at the British Steel Corporation's Port Talbot plant in South Wales.

An IMF team is returning to Venezuela for further talks on a requested $1.1bn compensatory financing facility. Commercial banks, which held inconclusive talks with Venezuela on rescheduling $18.4bn of debts last week, are insisting that Venezuela first agree to a programme with the IMF. Some bankers doubt that this will happen before presidential elections at the end of this year.

ats with the suspicion that the bid for BHP is serious.
It was announced in Perth just after the close of trading on the Melbourne Stock Exchange yesterday. Mr Holmes à Court is offering BHP's 178,000 shareholders two shares worth A$6 each in an obscure Western Australian company called Wigmores for every one of BHP's 340 million shares.

In London the BHP share price jumped by 32p to 644p, equivalent to A$10.90. There are 20,000 British shareholders.

Amazement turned to bafflement in Australia when it was realized that Mr Holmes à Court only acquired control of Wigmores, which has the state franchise for Caterpillar earth moving equipment, on Friday, Wigmores supplies equipment to Mr Holmes a Court's Bell Group, his master company, and its capitalization is one per cent of that of BHP.

But Mr Holmes à Court said that the bid for BHP, which would be one of the world's biggest takeovers if successful, was unconditional, and he would buy any number of BHP shares from one to all the equity.

Caught completely wrongfooted, BHP could only profess ignorance. Sir James McNeill, the company's chairman. said: "I have had no communication from Wigmores and am at a loss to understand what their intentions may be."

While similarly ignorant, London analysts speculated that Mr Holmes à Court's aim was to drive up the BHP share, partly by making the bid, but also by eliciting a response from the management about the company's prospects.

These are widely believed to be recovering, after a poor patch,

However, shop sales in the last three months were still 1.5 per cent higher than in the three previous months and 6 per cent up on the same period a year ago.
The Retail Consortium, trade association for most of Britain's retailers, was surprised that the July figures showed a decline over June because trade reports pointed to the volume of sales keeping up.

Taken with the poor June figures for industrial production announced last week, the fall in retail sales may add to speculation that economic recovery is starting to falter.

The consumer boom may be However, the Government's spending in the shops may now be rising at a slower rate.

Exceptionally hot weather is thought to have affected business in the shops in July. Retailers are also worried that the boom could ease as the effects of increased mortgage rates bite. There is also a limit to how much additional credit will be taken up, retailers argue. Heavy buying on credit has helped to keep sales up. UAPT Infolink, Britain's largest credit information agency says that when hire purchase controls were relaxed in July last year the volume of credit applications increased substantially, but July this year still saw an increase of 8.5 per cent. The home improvements market which normally peaks in May and June continued to be very buoyant. New car sales are expected to boost August credit spending UAPT says.

BRITISH CLOTHING MANUFACTURER REPORTS RECORD PROFITS.

In the twelve months to 26th March 1983, the Group made pre-tax profits of £1.3 million from improved trading in both the Contract Manufacturing Group and the Branded Products Group.

The Contract Manufacturing Group supplies women's outerwear to Marks & Spencer p.l.c., and the Branded Products Group retails its products through the Alexon and Horrockses brands. During the year the Group acquired a 75 per cent interest in Agentborder Limited which has contributed £340,000 to pre-tax profits in four months.

To sustain this improved performance and achieve further growth, the Board have approved a Rights Issue to raise £4.1 million. This will be used for funding major capital expenditure programmes to increase production efficiency and capacity, and to develop a chain of Alexon retail shops.

UK banks clear Argentine loan

By Peter Wilson-Smith Banking Correspondent

The Government gave Britsh banks the all-clear to sign a $1.5bn commercial bank loan for Argentina yesterday after the International Monetary Fund board confirmed that Argentina was compling with the terms of its loan programme.

The loan was due to be signed last Friday. But the Government made it clear to British banks that it would not approve it until there was firm evidence that Argentina was no longer financially discriminating against British companies. The IMF had told Argentina that it had to end such discrimination by the end of last month as a condition for receiving further loans. The favourable verdict from the IMF executive board has satisfied the British Government. The Treasury said that forbidden to sell assets or proceeding with the loan was a property. Shell, one of the commercial decision for the

The new GKN is now benefiting from a gradual improvement in the British conomy. Automotive components sales have been helped by the increase in British car production, with further improvements yet to come from increased demand for ears with the new A registration. United States demand is picking up slightly behind the recovery recorded at home.

However, when reporting interim pretax profits of £38.1m for the first half of 1983, compared with £30.5m at the same stage last year, the company stressed that demand remains low from the commercial vehicle and agricultural vehicle industries. This reinforces the warning about the grim trading outlook given by Leyland Vehicles.

But the pace is picking up. GKN made £28m of its interim profits in the second quarter of the year and this level of profit should be sustained in the second half.

Changing attitudes on how engineers are trained

The Engineering Council, set up by the Government in the wake of the Finniston report into the role of engineering in Britain's poor manufacturing performance, is supposed to have a wider role than the organization it is supplanting, the Council of Engineering Institutions (CEI).

Its brief is to change attitudes and stimulate practical alterations in incustry, acadaemia, the professional bodies within engineering and even in the City.

But, there is a danger, as it attempts to promote the cause of engineering, that, at best, the Council will achieve only a scattergun effect and, at worst the Council's mettle has come with its policy statement on education and training.

It admits in advance that some industrialists are worried about what they regard as an mean that many employers do not want to see too many engineers with high academic qualifications emerging from the educational system with high-flown ideas of how much they should be paid or what industry should be doing.

The issue revolves sround the Council's ideas for "enhanced" "extended" full-time degree courses. Enhancementmeans tacking on to engineering courses those elements which have tended to be lacking in the United Kingdom, such as aspects of design and grounding in management and business methods. Emphasis on actual applications of engineering is seen as the four years instead of the usual three at universities and polytechnics. They would either allow studies of greater depth in a particular sector of a multi-disciplinary approach across a number of engineering sectors or course incorporating business skills.

A design project would be a part of any extended course. The Council sets great store by design, thus bringing market-place considerations to the fore, since this is seen as setting Britain on the road to a Technic culture of the kind which has so benefited countries like West Germany and

The Council's argument is it will get lost in a miasma of generalities. The first real chance to assess that companies which have competed successfully are those committed to constant innovation springing from market-led research and development. Typically, in such companies, engineers have made a key contribution to success, rising to a high management level in the process. Hence the Council reasons that we need an increase in the number of graduate engineers able to reach bigh positions.

France.

The fear of elitism could be misplaced. The Council says at most a fifth of university students and a tenth of those at polytechnics should be on extended courses. A graduate under the Council's proposals, would become Master of Engineering (M.Eng).

From the "enhanced" threeyear courses, or their sandwich equivalent, seen as the route for production the main body of professional engineers, would emerge Bachelors of Engineering (B.Eng). Some-what hopefully seen as a cut

Extended corses are already being introduced at some universities with the support of the University Grants Committee. They account for about 5 per cent of present student engineers and this proportion should raise to 15 per cent when all the planned projects are fully operational. But although "enhanced", not all the courses yet go far enough in providing a broad base of engineering skills. The Council's accreditation procedures, now being brought in will weed out those not coming up to scratch.

One current problem is a tendency for extended courses to be introduced at the expense of student numbers, so as to stay within spending con-straints. That can cut student numbers by a quarter. The Council wants the numbers kept up, which means more money has to be found from somewhere or that its plans are unrealistic.

The council has been trying to find out what industry thinks about all this and discovered that employers favour either three-year, full time courses or preferably. their sandwich equivalent. So far Council has clearly failed to sell its ideas on extended courses to large numbers of employees. admits an important test is how far employers will be willing to offer the right career opportunities to graduates. There is no sign at present that attitudes have changed dramatically.

It also remains to be seen how far companies will involve themselvwa at university and polytechnic level in designing Derek Harris

Albright & Wilson Ltd 1983 HALF YEAR RESULTS

The considerable improvement in profits in the first six months of 1983 reflected increased sales, further gains in manufacturing efficiency and benefits from the reduced value of sterling. The results were also affected by the sale of the Bush Boake Allen flavour and fragrance business in September 1982 and the inclusion from January 1983 of the TCE UK companies, mainly engaged in the manufacture of paper chemicals. Excluding Bush Boake Allen and TCE, sales would have risen in value by about 15% but trading profit would still have increased by just over 50%. Almost alt sectors continuited to the improvement in results, with the targest gain being achieved in phosphates, though from a low base. Recession in the North American pulp and paper industry and low margins in UK fertilisers led to a reduced contribution from the two sectors concerned. Whilst the recovery in UK profits progressed, the overseas companies continued to provide the major part of group profits.

Playing to better health

by Geoffrey Ellis

It is a familiar scene . . . a figure sits in front of a TV screen as rows of advancing aliens zap the defender, a gentle movement of the joystick empties the screen of the intergalactic horrors and a wry smile passes over the player's face. The player, however, is not a teenager, but 3 middle aged man in a hospital wheelchair.

He is the patient of an American doctor who is in the forefront of developing games for use in therapeutic sessions with brain damaged patients. Dr William Lynch, director of the Brain Injury Rehabilitation unit of the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Palo Alto, California, first realised the value of games as a reatment for his patients in 1978 when the hospital was given an Atari video computer system to help pass the time for ong stay cases. He saw that the skills required for the games eye-hand coordination, memory, attention span, timing and judgment - were exactly what he was trying to rekindle in his

He now regularly prescribes sessions of Breakout, a game in which the player demolishes a coloured brick wall with a bouncing ball. This helps brain stimulation. He cites one case of a middle-aged accident victim suffering with left-hemisphere brain damage that left him with slurred speech and faulty eyehand coordination. After three months of playing Breakout the patient's score more than doubled and eventually he was able to leave hospital and return ot

Following on from his work with the brain damaged, Dr Lynch is planning a long term research product with psychiatric cases, alcoholics and geriatrics, developing games for their particular needs.

FIRST

Dr William Lynch treats a patient using a home computer

Dr Robert Olton, a leading American psychologist, now on the staff of Atari as manager of behavioural research, tells of many other examples of the use of games as therapy. He cites the use for opthalmic cases where, to combat the common problem of "lazy eye" (Amblyopia), two test groups were set up. The first were given the standard treatment of eye exercises and corrective lenses, and the second were prescribed 30 minutes of playing Pac Man each day.

Sitting in front of the screen was a perfect means of eye exercise which helped pull the eye back into its correct position. The group using conventional treatment lost interest in their exercises, but the video control group enthusi-astically continued their treatment to the end of the two week

Games can also be used to help burns victims. There is a great reluctance to exercise a painfully burnt hand, but when asked to operate a games joystick, performing exactly the same exercise that caused pain, the patient will happily move into sessions of Pac Man and Space Invaders.

use a mouse to enter commands into their computer. Mouse teching with a micro end does away with the need to tap messages in through the key board, writes lan White. The hand-held mouse, so called because its cigarette-pack sized box and thin connecting wire give it the appearance of a robotic rodent, translates movement over a desk-top pad into movement of the screen cursor. Pointing to an onscreen character this way is much faster than using the direction arrows of the keyboard.

Once the cursor has located the correct screen character a button on the mouse is pressed to execute There are three click buttons on the mouse. Pressing each one three times enables up to nine sequences of commands to be ered that would usually take up to 15 keyboard strokes.

The new mouse is from Mouse Systems in the US and is available from Data Design Techniques.

"It eliminates laborious cursor and keyboard control operations allowing the businessman to concentrate on actually using the computer rather than wasting time earning complex keyboard control sequences and how to be a typist." DDT claims it is the first to offer a mouse that can be used with a multitude of programs such as VisiCalc and Wordstar. The Visi-Corp software company offers a mouse with its VisiOn program. But this will only work with that specific program which uses a technique called windowing. Here the mouse is not used just to position a cursor or execute commands. A matter of perks

by Richard Sharpe

Money is not the only thing to motivate employees in the UK computer industry. The challenge of working on new projects is important, and so are the perks that go with the job. Surveys by the National Computing Centre reveal that perks make up as much as 16 per cent of the value of a salary n the industry. The overall average is 10 per cent with a company car heading the list. While the company car is now quite common for UK management, the difference about the UK computer industry is that more and more riddle managers are beginning to get one. A quarter of chief systems analysis, a fair pro-portion of chief programmers and one in five operations managers now get a car.

Paid health insurance is one of the newer perks on offer, along with share options. Share options are more common with US companies where the option is open to all employees, whatever grade. Digital Equipment, the US mini computer maker, offers a special price on shares and the mood of its Reading headquarters can be judged by the share price posted in the cafeteria. Some of the perks including getting goods at discount, have another side to them. One is paid overtime. Another is the payment of a pension scheme -even though these need investigating to find out if they are transferable, at what rate and whether they are better than commercial offerings. Computer staff at user sites and in the computer industry in general ger slightly more leave than their counterparts in the same grades in the rest of UK industry. There are, according to the National Computing Centre's survey, regional variations such as the above average holidays offered for jobs in Scotland and Northern Treland. One thing that should not be left out, however, is the use of a microcomputer at home. Many employers encourage their staff, particularly the program development staff, to take micros home so that they can continue with program writing.

As many micros also have games packages, presumably not all the time the micro is at home is spent in serious programming.

70% Fulcrum (£16,644 - £17,787 Pay Award Pending)

This post is the head of a joint department which provides computer services and advice to the City Council of Norwich and the County Council of Norfolk. A number of other district councils in the County folk. A number of other district councils in the County receive computer services from the department. The Department has two IBM 4341/MO2 (8mb) central processors operating under OS/VS1 and CICS/VS, with plans to move to VTAM and MVS during 1983/84. The system supports a large and growing TP network of nearly 200 terminals in the City and County. Systems development includes mainframe and stand alone application over a wide range of subject areas.

range of subject areas. Applicants (male/female) must have a record of achievement both as a manager and as a computer achievement both as a manager and as a computer professional. Responsibilities will include ensuring that the computing developments and strategies of both authorities are met, advice on mini and micro computer systems and management of the day to day provision of computer services.

Further particulars and application forms can be obtained from the County Personnel Officer, County Hall, Marineau Lane, Norwich NR1 2DH, telephone Norwich (0603) 61 1 122 — Extension 5200. Closing date for applications is: 9th September 1983.

Datapoint, the Texan office automation company, last week announced the installation of its 5,000th ARC local area network. At the same time the United Kingdom subsidiary sold the 200th ARC in-

The significance of those figures, according to Datapoint, is that they outnumber all competing local area networks (LANs) put together. There is some justice in the complaints of Datapoint executives that ARC has not recieved the attention deserved by its success in the market, compared to the scores of competitors who may have sold a few networks each. The LAN is a general method for connecting electronic equipment within an office so that users can exchange information and share resources such as printers and data files. Companies have come up with a bewildering variety of technical solutions to ensure that millions of bits of data per second can find their way to the correct destinations on the network: buses, rings and stars; broadband and baseband; token passing and collision

The only serious attempt to impose an industry standard on the chaos is Ethernet. a network invented by Xerox and now the basis of an international standard sup-ported by three dozen significant computer manufacturers, including Britain's ICL.

"Ethernet is busy trying to the up standards; we are the working standard," says Alan Watson, marketing services manager of Datapoint (UK). His dismissve comment may be valid in the short term. The customer appeal of ARC today is that it is tried and tested, with a track record unrivalled by Ether or any other

THE WEEK Clive Cookson

Putting ARC on the map

But the long run interests of the industry and its customers must lie in an open standard accepted by a large number of munufacturers. And so far Ethernet is the only candidate, whatever the technical merits of its baseband CSMA/CD (carrier sense multiple access with collision detection) protocol.

The premise of "open systems interconnection" through a standard LAN in that the user can choose the best pieces of epoipment from different suppliers and make them communicate as if they had all been made by the same company. But that advantage still lies in the future.

The electronic connectors required to attach the various terminals to Ethernet still cost too much for a mass market, though the price is falling fast as new chips are developed for the purpose. Connec only one manufacturer's products in a proprietary network like ARC is obviously simpler.

Since Datapoint offers a reasonable range of processors and peripherals, customers do not have to make a great customers us not nave to make a great sacrifice to buy ARC. The 200th UK customer, H&J Quick Group (a Ford dealer based in Manchester), is buying £240,000 of Datapoint hardware based on a 6600 file processor with 120 mb of disc storage at its central parts warehouse; five applications processors, 41 visual display screens, 160 system printers, two highspeed printers and 18 parts terminals will be connected to the ARC.

An example of a smaller ARC is Victoria Hospital, Blackpool, which has just two terminals now to handle patient statistics and will have five when complete. The hardware for a simple system like that can cost under £10,000.

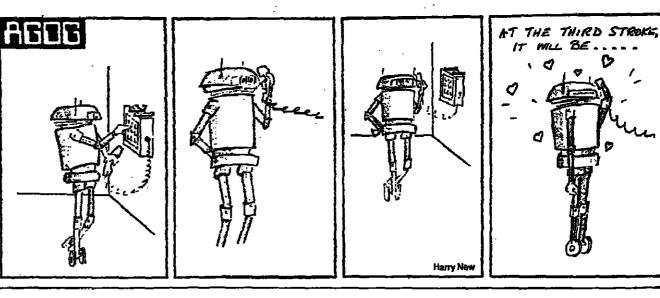

Datapoint's high-flying image crashed last year when profits slumped to a mere $2.4m and the first half of this year was no better, with a profit of $2.3m on worldwide sales of $266m. Datapoint shares are still only a third of their peak 18 months ago.

Part of the retrenchment has been to stop in-house development of Datapoint's ISX digital telephone exchange, which the company announced in 1981 as an integral part of its office automation strategy. The ISX ran into technical problems at its test isk ran into technical problems at its test sites and the project has been sold to Teknekron, a small American electronics company, for further development. (How-ever Datapoint does have sole international marketing rights to Teknekron products).

Therefore Datapoint remains dependent on ARC and its associated products. Its troubles last year have presumably delayed manufacturing outside the United States. But Mr Watson insists: "It is a stated aim of the corporation that we will manufacture in the UK in the not too distant future. It is part of our current five year plans." Until Datpoint does establish a research, development or production presence here it is bound to be handicapped in the British market and particularly in the public sector. But that has not stopped the company selling a large ARC to the Ministry of Defence in Several computer programes have been developed which enable messages to be enciphered before transmission and deciphered on receipt. Since the programs themselves are usual ly commercially available and thus "public", the security of their programs is vested in a 'key" (a string of alphabetical or other characters) known only to sender and recipient.

In the United States one such program, developed by IBM, has now been published by the National bureau of Standards as a Data Encryption Standard (DES). It requires a key of 56 bits (approximately ten alpha-numeric characters). Since the difficulty of breaking such codes increases with the length of the key, it is reported that IBM proposed a longer key, but agreed to reduce it after representations from National Security Agency.

Martin E. Hellman, a leading sources included many of the US cryptographer, believes that finest British (and, later, Amerithis was done to weaken the can) mathematicians using the standard so that the agency could break the key if required. Most cyphers can eventually be broken. The cryptographer's German key within 24 hours. It makes "dual key control" possible and also means that no one person need ever know the whole key. But a much more interesting possibility lies in the "public key" systems being developed.

In these the key is also in two parts but, unlike the dual key method where both sending and receiving computers have to have access to both parts of the key, one part is used to "lock" the code and the other to "unlock" it. The recipient is provided with a program that enables him to generate both keys, but he alone needs to know the unlocking key.

The locking key may be sent to the sender over an insecure channel since, although in theory it would be mathema tically possible to derive the unlocking key from the locking infeasible to do so.

It has even been suggested that the locking, or public, key could be published - for example, in a trade directory or telephone book. But since the key for a secure system tends to be rather long (upwards of 200 digits), this does not seem to be very practical. Public key systems require a lot of computing power and it may be two parts, as has been done in some years before they are the Enigma program. This available on small computers.

Gilt-edged prices gained up to £2.50, before the failure of the New York bond markets to follow suit yesterday afternoon caused some relapse of prices in after-hours trading in London.

Gains of £1½ to £2 were finally registered, but attempts by jobbers to hold the higher levels failed. Nevertheless, prices were much closer to the price set by the Government Broker for Wednesday's £800m, 10 per cent tap.

Leading industrials achieved gains of 15p in places, while stock shortages also helped to keep prices firm.

ICI ended 8p better at 550p, while Glaxe soared 30p to 920p on news that Morgan had bought 20 per cent of the company for its United States investors. News of a new drug,

Needing 347 to win, New like this. The rest of the Zealand did well to make as afternoon produced the liveliest many as they did after having exchanges of the day; been at one time 61 for four. For the fifth wicket Coney Coney, true to form, contri-buted a doughty 68. In the end the margin of England's victory was a few runs more than those made by Gower after he hadbeen dropped, when 21, on the innings. From that moment, however, England were always in front. Howarth's decision to field was not. I think, wrong. It anything, the pitch was less awkward yesterday than on the first day, partly because it had lost pace. But still the odd one flew, specially when the ball was new and hard. In his last season as the groundsman at Lord's Jim Fairbrother, while not producing one of his special pitches, had provided the conditions for an interesting and enjoyable game.

New Zealand soon finished off England's second innings yesterday monrning. Within 20 minutes Cook had been well caught off Chatfield at mid-on, Foster had skied Hadlee, also to mid-on, and Cowans had been caught at the wicket. In 3.3 overs with the new ball, England's last three wickets fell

For the second time in the first three Tests Hadlee finished with eight wickets. When New Zealand went in the previous 18 wickets to fall had been worth only 255 runs between them. The chances of them making the highest score of the match to win it were remote.

By lunch they were 43 for two. Wright and Howarth having been caught at the wicket giving Taylor his 150th and 151st Test catches. Wright. seemed surprised to be given; out: Howarth walked with barely a glance at the umpire. Wright had started promisingly,

The total attendance was approximately 75,000. By way of comparison, 50,000 watched the three days of the Lord's Test between England and New Zealand in 1937. In 1978 when, as now, the match was played in August and lasted four days 55,334 went to see it. In 1973 a five-day game also attracted 75,000 people.

What was so encouraging about the figures for the match just finsished was that they came at a time when, so soon after the World Cup, interest could be falling away. The weather and New Zealand's victory at Headingley have been

Perhaps the most remarkable figure of all, so far as Tests between England and New Zealand are concerned, dates from 1949 when, on the second day of the match at Old Trafford, the gates were closed an hour before the start of play with 38,000 inside the ground. Today, with three times as many seasts, Old Trafford holds barely half as many people.

Emburey lines up a victory in sights of the big guns

Lancashire will have to work hard today if they are to prevent Middlesex from embracing their eleventh win in the county championship, sponsored by Scheppes, Embury, who took five for 64 yesterday, has given Middlesex a sight of victory as, for the second time, Lancashire were rounded up for 193. In 55 minutes before the close Barlow and Slack stood firm in reducing their target While it was pleasantly warm when sun broke through later on, it was overcast at the day's start and Old Trafford was a rather forbidding place as Downton, and Williams, walked ont with Middlesex precariously placed at 89 for seven, 104 runs behind.

nton steered Allou's first ball past gully to the boundary, and Middlesex must have thought that a suitable and encouraging riposte -Allott's bouling had confounded their batsmen on the first day when he took five for 40. But after this, runs became a scarcity as Lancashire's bowlers, supported by a keen field, applied pressure. After the eighth wicker pair had added 15 precious runs, Downton fell to an excellent catch low down in the guily by Fowler.

That brought in Sykes, a raw recruit fromthe Lord's ground steff. Slightly built, Sykes showed plenty of courage as he passed an awesome test, staying the course of 14 overs and scoring four of 10 runs with Williams. By now Williams had made 10, and as O'Shaughnessy ran in to bowl the fifty-seventh over. Williams doubled his score with a beautiful stroke, bringing him four runs to square leg, and another, an on drive, for four more.

O'Shaughnessy's revenge was sweet indeed because, by levelling Williams's middle sturne, Middle-sex were finally routed for 120 runs. David Lloyd came to take guard.

OLD TRAFFORD: Middlesex, with all second innings wickers in hand, need 234 runs to beat Lancashire.

In the 40minutes before lunch, in which Lancashire moved on by another 32 runs, both batsmen had another 32 runs, both batshich had the benefit of a reprieve. Williams dropped Fowler, than two, off his own bowling, and David Lloyd was put down at first slip by Brearley off Emburey's bowling. Pounding in from the Stretford end. Daniel made the first contribution to a fascinating afternoon, when, with the help of a first-rate catch at aecond slip by Emburey, he took the second slip by Emburey, he took the wickets of Lloyd and then to a first Edgbaston: Leicestershire, with eight second innings wickets in hand, lead Warwickshire by 147 runs The tree-encircled school ground at Wellingborough is one that should encurage the playing of strokes, but it produced disappointingly few yesterday. Mercifully, a gentle breeze took the edge off the heat, or the monotony of the Northamptonshire batting, Boydwickshire, at present third and fourth in the championship, are to gain significant ground on the leaders, Middlesex, a win for one is almost essential. But both are equally reluctant to see the other take such a stride and once Warwickshire's chirpy tenth-wicket partnership of 70 had ended, yesterday's play reflected that fact. Moss excepted, would have tried the patience of a saint.

As things were, Essex, in a match crucial to their championship aspirations, found wickets as hard to come by as Northamptonshire increasingly did runs. The form of the Irish Derby dictates that Shareef Dancer will be extremely difficult to beat in the Benson and Hedge Gold Cup at York today and he is my selection. When he won in Ireland he had the French and English Derby winners directly behind him in second and third place. Not only that, but the margin of that victory was much more like five lengths than the three officially recorded.

In the meantime the form was given an emphatic boost by the fourth horse, Quilted, when he won the Princess of Wales's Stakes at Newmarket. And now even that form looks gilt-edged thanks to the sterling deeds of Khairpour. John French, Awaasif and Morcon in the last three weeks.

The word fromn Ireland is that Caerleon, who lost his two front shoes when he was unplaced in the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes at Ascot, will have his tongue tied down today and that he is expected to give Shareef Dancer a harder fight then he did at the Curragh where he was completely and utterly outpaced by Shareef Dancer However, Caerleon surely faces an uphill struggle, even allowing for the fact that he won the French Derby against suspect stayers. He looked one paced in Ireland whereas Shareef Dancer looked blessed with overdrive.

Along with countless others, I found that pace and that ability to quicken absolutely captivating and I expect it to be the key factor once again. Any misgivings about Shareef Dancer's well-being vanished into thin air at Newmarket last Wednesday when he treated Electric and Karadar with the same sort of distain on the Limekilns as he had previously shown to Caerleon and Teenoso in Ireland.

The fly in the ointment could be Gorytus, especially if he turns out to be as good as many of us believed him to be just after he had trounced Salieri in the Acomb Stakes on this corresponding day last year. At Newbury last Friday, Saheri gave us a timely reminder that the form was good when he waltzed away with the Hungerford Stakes.

Yet it is still stretching the imagination a bit far to picture Gorytus beating Shareef Dancer because nothing that he has achieved this year, or, more important, last year, compares with the sheer excellence that Shareef Dancer exuded in Hot Touch, the conqueror of Guns Of Navarone in the Mecca-Dante Stakes over today's course and distance in May, will be trying to emulate his sire, Moulton, who won this race 10 years ago. Giving weight all round. Hot Touch took the honours if not the lion's share of the prize-money in the Scottish Derby last month.

However, as there has never been all that much between Hot Touch and his frequent galloping companion Teenoso at home, it is difficult to envisage him coping now with Shareef Dancer in view of the fact that Teenoso was comprehensively outpaced by Shareef Dancer in the Irish Derby. Likewise, the Gordon Stakes winner, John French, appears to be held by my selection, especially if one takes a line through Quilted.

Electric won the Great Voltigeur Stakes at this meeting last year, but he has never given me the impression that his armoury harbours sufficient material to counter the sort of rapier-like thrust that Shareef Dancer is capable of George Robinson, our Newmarket correspondent, said yesterday that my contention was certainly borne out by their gallop against one another there last Wednesday when Shareef Dancer was in total command

Every bit as fascinating as the main race is the Yorkshire Oaks which features the first clash between the respective equine queens of England and Ireland, namely Sun Princess and Give Thanks. The latter has already won the Musidora Stakes at York this year and her trainer Jim Bolger knows precisely what is required now, having sent Condessa over from Ireland to accomplish a similar mission two years ago. But then, so too does Sun Princess's trainer Dick Hern, for he was responsible for Shoot A Line, the winner of the Yorkshire Oaks in 1980.

If the running of Acclimatize behind Sun Princess in the Oaks and her effort behind Give Thanks in the Lancashire Oaks is anything to go by, a victory for Sun Princess should be a formality now. Howgever, I am sure that it is not quite as simple as that. Arguably, though, Sun Princess has the greater speed and that could easily be the deciding factor on this

And so to the supporting cast. With the future in mind, it may well be worth the York committee's while to reconsider the conditions of the High Line Stakes, Jones: third chance?

WBA bid to woo

World Boxing Council's weber-weight championship, Colin Jones may now box for the rival: World Boxing Association's version of the title. Jones has boxed Militon McCrory, twice for the American promoter, Don King, first in Remo-and then in Las Vegas. Now, King's rival. Boli Arms, in prepared to negotiate with the Welshman to light for the WBA title before the end of the aver.

negotiate with the Weintman so fight for the WBA title before the end of the year.

Aram has invited Jenes and his manager, Eddie Thomas, to Marsala, Sicily, where he is promoting the WBA title boot between the champion, Don Currie, and Roger Stafford in September. Jones will then probably be effered a match with the winner in November and it could take place in London. "London could be a good wane," Aram said in Las Yeges, "There should he no problems. I could work with Mickey Duff or Frank Warren, though it would probably be Duff because he has Weaubley."

Jenes and Thomas are accepting the invitations to go to Marsala, although November would be earlier than Thomas would wish. He would prefer Jones to take a long rest after two world fills bouts in five months.

The offer is the result of the favourable impression Jones has made on American television in his two fights in the United States, and Aram's own opinion of him as an outstanding fighter, it may be an offer that Jones cannot refuse and a consolation for his defeat on a split decision in I as Years on Saturday.

Athlete's loot - a contagion that is galloping in from Finland

Ringmasters crack their whips as the circus stars roll up

Some of the men with the most stamina in the first world championships here have not been out on the track. After eight days of ceaseless activity they were moving as strongly and stealthily as ever on Sunday evening, at the official 2,000-strong bunfight - I should say reception - at the Dipoli athletes' village: the promoters of the permit meetings around the world, specially those over the next month, where the real business of today's athletics is

They were all there, from Los Angeles Tokyo, New York and Zurich, sharp-eyed, smooth-tongued, and their pockets bulging, while the negro athletes swayed to the bosa nova, showing off to the flaxen Nordic girls by simultaneously balancing full beer glasses on their heads. The Scandinavians bopped up and down self-conciously like Ted Heath's shoulders, and the heavy men from the throws stood around sphinz-like, their pint mugs seeming no bigger then egg-cups in those

It was like the Newmarket sales. I bumped into Arne Haukvik, the ringmaster from Oslo who has stage-inanaged many world records down the years. "Now I am trying to arrange some real races," he said with a mischievous twinkle. Yet at the end of these world championships the overriding question is: what is any longer

Is it the cat and mouse, pedestrian races we have predominantly seen here - in which the stars are competing not to achieve athletic excellence but for the prestige and status of medal positions which will subsequently enhance their market value on the international circus record-breaking attempts are bartered, appearances bought and sold - or is it those staged, carefully choreographed races which result. The truthful answer

There were, in my opinion, only three leading contenders in the track events not run wholly in lanes - 800 metres and upwards - run as we might have expected them to rum 30 years ago, bravely up front, putting all their credentials publicly on the line and defying the rest to do their damnedest: Peter Elliott, Jarmila Kratochvilova and Mary Decker. It is for that reason that the men's 800 metres final, especially, and the women's 1,500 and 3,000 metres both brilliantly won by Decker, were the most memorible longer races of the championships.

When did we last have great front runners such as Herb Elliott and Emil Zatopek? Before Miss Decker and the still recognize standing with them the 3,000 present Tatyana Kazanina, we must so back to Juantorena in 1976 or to Bayi in the 1974 Commonwealth 1,500 metres, a glorious world record with Walker vainly chasing his shadow.

As remarked by Stan Greenberg, that fount of wisdom and the brains behind the BBC television team, it is a myth fostered in Britain that "tactical" means running from the back it can far more dramatically mean draining the soul of those behind from out in front. Peter Elliott ran the one way open to him to maximize his effort and in doing so nearly took a medal from a much faster man, as well as pulling out Curz of Brazil so fiercely he lost the gold. For the wrong reasons promoters will be more than anxious to have Elliott in their field

To those I have already mentioned must be added, of course, the two marathons, in which we had marvellous races won by the redoubtable favourites, Robert de Castella and Grete Waitz, from a cast of courageous challengers including such men as Balacha (Ethiopia), Masong (Tanzania), Stabl (Sweden) and Jones (Britain), and Garean (Canada), Dickerson (US), Joyce (Republic of Ireland) and Smith (Britain) among the women.

Yet even these two events were clouded by the absence of Lopes, of Portugal, second to Salazar, of the United States, the fastest marathon runner in history, de Castella in Rotterdam, and Joan Benoit, of the US the fastest over this distance.

The one thing which ought to have been absent from these championships was the first A of IAAF (International Amateur Athletic Federation). The athletics world is caught up in a monstrous conspiracy to camouflage professionalism in order to preserve Olympic amateur participation. It is probable that the Soviet Union and East Germany sent below-strength teams and under-performed in Helsinki because they consider next year's Olympics in Los Angeles more important, whereas the athletes of leading Western capitalist countries were here in force because of the commercial benefits to be derived. The administrators of the IAAF want to keep the wagon rolling with the top competitors on board because open professionalism would mean the end of prestige and free travel around the world for dozens of committee men and their wives. One of the worst moments of the championship was when a senior British official with international reponsibility stood talking to an athlete and failed to

of a few hours before, Colin Reitz.
On Sunday night Primo Nebiolo, Italian president of the IAAF, strolled round the wast Dipoli reception party, his entourage of countries following at a discreet distance, like some patriarchal nineteenth century squire coming to see that the workers were enjoying themselves at

He could afford to smile. The wagon i said to have grossed over £4m, which will rise to a staggering £10m in Rome in 1987. With a so-called amateur body making such astronomic profits, the moral obligation upon them to initiate immediately world-wide random drug-testing highly expensive, is more mandatory than

The contention of Sebastian Coe, that prize-money is preferable to appearance money if either is to be allowed because it guarantees a commitment by the competiguarantees a communication of the cause tors, is sadly not foolproof, because competitors can still split the prize money equally in "arranged" races, just as they do in exhibition tennis, which is a shabby con the cause of th trick regularly perpetrated upon the public. The love of money is assuredly the root of evil in sport.

Gold turns to bronze East Berlin (AP) - The Western media called East Germany the most successful team in Helsinki, but East Berlin newspapers yesterday listed them in third place behind the United States and the Soviet Union.

Sources in the West put the East Germans first in unofficial tables with 10 gold medals, compared to eight for the Americans and six for the Russians The East German Communist Party newspaper Neues Deutschland came to a different conclusion, using a system that allows seven points for a gold medal, five for silver, four for bronze, three for fourth place, two for fifth and one for sixth.

Under this system, the United States came out on top with 154 points, the Soviet Union were second with 152 and East Germany third with 150.

The carousel spins on to the Palace

Nobody is stopping to get off after the world championships, which finished in Helsinki on Sunday. Those interminable laggage carousels at Heathrow were heavier by five individual medals and the the only person with a clear chance.

Steve Cram's victory in the 1,500 metres has made him the new king of the circuit. He will be courted by the promoters of the remaining independent meetings throughout Europe, Cram, instead of Ovett (or Coc, if there is any chance of a return so soon), will call the abots and perhaps even decide who will not run against him.

The first decision, an issue in which he will be given priority, is his choice of event for next weekend. Each country is allowed weekend. Each country is allowed one athlete per event, and if Cram chooses the 1,500 metres, the selectors will have slight problem, if they cannot persuade Steve Ovett to run the 5,00 metres, a distance at which he has excelled in the past.

The problem would come if Ovett

All Blacks' tour is postponed

Wellington (Reuter) - New Zealand's tour of Argentina, which was scheduled for October and was scheduled for October and November, has been postponed indefinitely, the chairman of the New Zealand Rugby Football Union, Ces Blazey, said last night. "It is hoped that the present difficulties will be soon resolved so that another date can be arranged for the postponed tour to take place", he said.

Relations between New Zealand Reianons between New Zealand and Argentina have been strained since New Zealand broke diplomatic ties during the Falldands crisis. Mr Blazey said negotiations for a replacement tour by the New Zealand team before the and of thick Zealand team before the end of this year were continuing and it was hoped to be able to make an t within a week.

It has been reported that New Zealand will instead tour Ireland, but Harry Booker, assistant storeary of the Irish Rugby Union, said yesterday: "We have no information whatsoever about such a tour. We have not invited them, but we would leave to see them, and but we would love to see them, and any approach would have to come from them first. I imagine it must be a runtour as we have heard here that the Ali Blacks would be going to Scotland, but I spoke to the Scottish RFU this morning and they know nothing about it either."

Australia's tight head prop, Stan Pilecki, is doubtful for the international match against New Zealand on Saturday (AFP reports). He has a back injury and was in considerable pain vesterday. The injury opens the way for the return of Declan Corran, the Newcastle from the return of the considerable pain vesterday. font row forward who was dropped from the Australian side after Argentina's recent 18-3 win in

Olympic réquest

New Delhi (AFP) - India have applied to stage the 1992 Olympic Games, the sports minister. Buta Sipph, told Parliament here. The offer was made in a letter to the International Olympic Committee he said in reply to a question, but, gave no further details. India heated the 1982 Asian Games last December.

Ovett, and the memory of the latter's impressive heat in the AAA championships, where he looked capable of Imin 44sec and less, could be persuasive. Ovett freely admitted what everyone could see in Helsinki: "It was the worst race of the life," he made after finishing my life," he said after finishing fourth in the 1,500 metres. But that defeat does not necessarily signify the end for Ovett.

the end for Ovett.

He has had more than his fair share of misfortune in the last two years, with illness and injuries putting a halt to his seemingly invincible run. But the factor which invincible run. But the factor which threatens to militate most against his return to the highest niche, which Cram has appropriated, is the length of time that Overt has been a top-cisss athlete. He has been a winner in all but a handful of races

Facing up to the wind again

By John Nicholls Isn Pinnell and Jeremy Hartley from Tynemouth, won an unexpe from Tynemouth, won an unexpec-tedly windy race, sponsored by Howe and Bainbridge, on the second day of the National 12 Class championship at Llandudno yester-day. After a fortnight of gantle, north-easterly breezes, it seemed strange to be faced once again with the enstormany south-westerly and a the customary south-westerly and a cloudy sky. No doubt a majority of the 80 entries preferred the exercising of their limbs to the perplexities of racing in calm conditions, although a few of them might have excluded. a few of them might have settled for something in between. Offishore, away from the deceptively smooth water by the beach, the wind was a steady force five with stronger gusts. Many crews showed their lack of practice in dealing with over-full sails and a suddenly unresponsive tiller, by capsizing on their way out to the course. The start was delayed to allow most of the stragglers time to recover, but a few failed to reach the line or chose to retire while the

Those that remined we Those that remined were steamy whittled down from the 76 that left the beach, to 58 at the first mark and 43 by the finish. As usual in such enditions, the leaders appeared to be completely in control at all times, and drove their boats powerfully around the triangular course. The tail-enders, on the other hand, wobbled their way round. keeping the recorders and the rescu fleet fully occupied.

Most of the leading group chose to pass early through the starting and Carolyn Juffe at the windward and Carolyn Jaffe at the windward mark. A few lengths astern was the powerful, all-male crew of Pinnell and Hardley, who soon wore down the lighter crew ahead, and took over the lead. Yeoman was still second on the second round, but fell away to eighth by the finish, allowing John and Sarah Sears to take second place for the second day running.

Defence cuts deal by Israel Cabinet

From Christopher Walker Jerusalem

The atmosphere of crisis surrounding Israel's troubled economy intensified yesterday as Cabinet ministers convened for their fourth session in less than a week to try and agree on a rescue attempt.

During the first of two extraordinary Cabinet sessions during the day, Mr Yoram Aridor, the finance minister, is understood to have tendered his resignation in protest against the refusal of Mr Moshe Arens, the defence minister, to agree to a sweeping £240m cut in the military budget.

Israeli sources reported that Mr Aridor made his threat after Mr Arens appeared to secure the backing of Mr Menachem Begin, the Prime Minister, in his resistance to the demanded cutback Later, a terse official communique said the two opposing ministers and their staff have been told to meet to draw up "an agreed proposal".

Shortly before the second of the day's Cabinet meetings was due to start, associates of Mr minister appointed since the Likud came to power in 1977 -said that he had agreed to delay his resignation after represen-tations from Cabinet colleagues.

Mr Aridor and his aides are at the difficulty in securing Cabinet backing for their proposed £705m austerity pack-

As the second meeting got under way, ministers said that a compromise on the defence cuts had been agreed which would limit them to £190m over three years rather than the original demand of an immediate £238m cut. Further emergency be discussed at ministerial level over the next few days.

The most critical is seen as the proposed £89m cut in education which would end Israel's present system of free secondary schooling. The plan is being vigorously opposed by Mr Zevulun Hammer, Edu-cation Minister who is due back from a foreign trip later this

According to the Central Vureau of Statistics, Israel's trade deficit in July spiralled to a total of £295m compared with only £248m in July, 1982. During the first seven months of this year, the overall trade deficit totalled £1,350m.

Royal holidaymakers bound for Balmoral

Sailing in: Members of the Royal Family disembarking from the Royal Yacht Britannia at Aberdeen yesterday for the start of their annual summer break. Climbing down the steps behind the Queen was Prince Andrew, who sported a new beard, while Prince Edward looked sun-tanned and Princess Anne and her daughter Zara, walked in step as they came ashore. understood to be a small warehouse in Birmingham. But Miss Grant said that she had nothing to do with most of the other 12 dismissed workers. "I am not a member of the Socialist League, I am a member of the Labour Party.

"I support a paper called Socialist Action. I read it, and I buy it. I am a socialist, and I do not believe there is anything wrong with that."

"I am not an infiltrator. I am a socialist who wanted a job. I lied to get a job because I knew that if BL management knew I was an activist and active in my trade union, they would not give

She added: "I come from Birmingham, and I know what happens to people like Derek Robinson ['Red Robbo', the BL convener dismissed four years ago] and Alan Thornett [the Trotskyist shop steward dismissed from the Cowley plant]. "I say again there was no conspiracy on my part to get a job other than I put two lies on the application form. I would like to ask people: 'Do they think I have no right a job because I am a socialist, and because I believe in supporting

Miss Grant said that she did not think she would find another job, because of the publicity surrounding her case.

Her job at Cowley was to put speakers into dasuboards. It involved shift work.
At Birmingham Polytechnic she was active in the students

Miss Grant refused to name the woman friend who had helped her to fill in the application form.

The woman sitting next to her at the press conference gave her name as Miss Valerie-Coultas. The room had been booked by the Socialist League.

Letter from Budapest

In the fast lane to a socialist Gomorrah

sected by Lenin Boulevard, there is a Marx Square, an Engels Square and the Karl Marx University of Economics. The scene seems to be set for troops of apple-cheeked Young Communist pioneers marching under red hanners towards the millenium.

A stroll along Peoples Republic Street (formerly Stalin Street: in eastern Europe streets shed names as rapidly as divorcees) presents a different picture, eloquently charting Hungary's conversion from a workers' state ("Forward, comrades") to a workercum-consumer society ("Buy now while stocks last"). It is a generously pro-portioned thoroughfare dotted with dilapidated but still beautiful turn of the century courtyards, protected by sculpted wrought iron gates. In sculpted wrought from gates. In swift succession, on the way to the opera, there is a camping centre, a hairdresser claiming loyalty to Vidal Sassoon. posters advertising classes in Jane Fonda aerobics and Yoga, a theatre booking office (Jesus Christ Superstar, Cats) and a hunting shop selling at manageable prices rods and eather boots.

Through the windows of a case, two delegates to a world Esperanto congress can be seen stroking each other's cheeks over an iced coffee.

For a visitor from Poland where farmers are paying black market prices for rubber wellingtons and where coffee is virtually unobtainable in shops, for a middle-aged Soviet tourist who can still remember when Esperantoists were once equated with Trotskyists, for an East German who regards aerobics if not Jane Fonda with some suspicion. Peoples Republic Street must seem like the fast lane to Gomorrah. The vision of a leisured society is perhaps deceptive. Hungarians work very hard: the difference is that they do so for themselves and not for the greater glory of the state or its ideology. The average wage is technically about $125 (£83) a month but nobody is fooled. Most people have second jobs or take on freelance assignments. Workers lease factory space to make their own goods to be sold privately or to repair cars. and pensioners work tax free as caretakers.

The system, which strives to Budapest is an artful confidence trick. Judging by the map, it is the very model of a modern socialist capital: Peopeles Republic Street is intersected by Jeniz Replaced. the revenue is undisclosed) which is also a symptom of the large, expanding black market. But though the Hungarians work hard, they also spend hard. There are at least two legal casinos in the capital, shops slash the prices of goods that are difficult to budge (Russian radios, for example). Advertisments on television deploy scantily clad girls to sell take-away fried chicken. caravans, new stretch trousers and visits to restaurants and cinemas. And this is social-

There is a price to pay for the Hungarians. One is an overwhelming obsession with the material that has not so much killed socialist ideology as put it to sleep to the accompaniment of lullabies.

The sense of being better off communist block has led to a shift of perspective. Now Hungarians compare themselves with the Austrians rather than East Germans. From one of Budapest's ubiquitous baths last week came the fluting tones of a woman in a neighbouring changing room, speaking in German: "Well of course, my dear, they have f-r-e-s-h orange juice in Vienna. The core of market socialism is that there must always be someone left over to envy.

The other price for the under socialism is an openly declared fidelity to Moscow. Although the leadership may have its doubts about the stationing of new Soviet missiles in Hungary, it is certainly not going to allow an independent peace movement to articulate these doubts. But the authorities at least try to tidy up the problem of dissident opinion in a Hunga-

Peace activists are warned at work, their apartments are searched, publications are confiscated but arrests are rare and harassment is not as relentless as in some of Hungary's neighbours.

The calculation is simple enough: though they may discuss the ideas of dissidents in student clubs and cafes, few people are willing to risk material well-being to express opposition in an organized way. Economic prosperity creates its own political breathing space

The papers

The Daily Mirror comments: "The moles in BL's Maestro works at Cowley may give their alegiance to Karl Marx, but they owe their tactics to Groucho. Fake references and bogus addresses were bound to be found out.... The wonder is not that they were uncovered but that it took so long.... The Cowley Marxists must not be used as an excuse for a general mole hunt in British industry. That could lead to political screening of employees. Once started, there is no telling where it might end."

The Daily Express comments: "Mrs Thatcher was wise to seize on the Argentine request for an IMF loan as a lever for securing the release of British company funds frozen in Buenos Aires. No Release. no loan, she said. Quite right. If bullies understand one thing it is resolution in others."

Tenant exchange

The Central Office of Infor-Exchange Scheme may be of help to tenants of local council, a new town, a housing association, the Development Board for Rural Wales or the Northern Ireland Housing Execuarea. The computer-based scheme looks for tenants in other parts o England, Wales and Northern Ireland who want to exchange homes. A leastet and registration form is available from local housing offices, housing advice centres or Citizens Advice Bureaux.
